Web 1

Web 1 Static Web

Web. 1.0, the “static web,” was the first generation of the web, which emerged in the early 1990’s. Web 1.0 was characterized by static HTML pages with limited interactivity. It was primarily used for displaying text and images.

Web 1.0: Static, Ready-Only

This first version of the internet is acknowledged as the first stage of the world wide web evolution. It is characterized as a read-only web experience. Users can read information on web pages driven by web browsers, HTML, HTTP and URL technology. The experience is highly decentralized, and there are no search engines. Instead, Web 1.0 content is static and hyperlinked together. Web 1.0 is also referred to as the Syntactic Web, and the user’s role is limited.

Web 2: “The Social Web”

Web 2.0 “The Social Web”

Web 2.0, also known as the “The Social Web,” emerged in the mid2000’s and was characterized by the rise of social media, user-generated content and interactive web applications. Web 2.0 allowed users to interact with each other and create and share content, which transformed the web from a new communication channel to a two-way communication platform.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Web 2.0 describes the current state of the internet, which has more user-generated content and usability for end-users compared to its earlier incarnation, Web 1.0.
- Web 2.0 does not refer to any specific technical upgrades to the internet; it refers to a shift in how the Internet is used.
- In the new age of the Internet, there is a higher level of information sharing and interconnectedness among participants.
- Web 2.0 has allowed for the creation of applications such as Facebook, Twitter, Reddit, TikTok, and Wikipedia.
- Web 2.0 has paved the way for Web 3.0, the next generation of the web that uses many of the same technologies to approach problems differently.

Web 3

Web 3.0, also known as the “semantic web,” is the current and emerging generation of the web, which is focused on machine-readable data and the use of artificial intelligence (AI) to make the web more intelligent and intuitive.

Web 3.0 aims to create a more personalized web experience by enabling machines to understand and interpret user data, preferences, and behaviors.

Web 3.0 also emphasizes the use of decentralized technologies, such as blockchain to create a more secure and transparent web.

A policy brief published by the Bennett Institute for Public Policy at the University of Cambridge defined Web3 as “the putative next generation of the web’s technical, legal, and payments infrastructure—including blockchain, smart contracts and cryptocurrencies.”

Web 3 is now spreading into many other sectors, including the social sector and carbon markets, art, real estate, gaming, and more.

Web 3 encompasses the idea of building decentralized applications (dApps)—platforms or products devoid of centralized control and management.

Popular Web 3 networks include Ethereum, Solana, Polygon and Cosmos. Some popular Web 3 platforms include OpenSea, Coinbase, Ledger and MetaMask. Many of these networks and platforms sell NFTs or cryptocurrencies like Bitcoin.
