The entrance to the Tuscarora Nation of North Carolina tribal grounds now has a prominent Native American carving.

This wooden edifice was hand carved by Chief Leon Locklear and stands on guard at the entrance. It measures 24 ft. by 14 ft.

Recently Principal Chief of the Six Nations Confederacy, Tadodaho Chief Leon Shenandoah and Wade Prinky of the Tuscarora in Niagara Falls visited the Tuscarora Nation of North Carolina. Chief Shenandoah and Mr. Prinky visited for five days and are shown here with Mr. Carnell Locklear and Eddie Hatcher at the Robeson Defense Office in Pembroke.

REFLECTIONS BY ALTA NYE OXENDINE

SOME HIGHLIGHTS FROM LAST WEEK

Monday-A few weeks ago, after mentioning Mike Mangiameli (along with others) in a letter to the CIV editor, I called him and asked if we could sometime get together to talk some things over. Today was the day. We got together and had quite a discussion. As I listened to Mike, I made some tentative assessments, such as: "He's a 20-year paratrooper who seems to be sincerely concerned about the security of his country." As he himself explained, he was trained to react against any situation which appears to present a threat (of terrorism, for example) or perhaps conspiracy? Mike is also a talkative Italian, who apparently believes in saying whatever he has to say, and letting "the chips fall where they may." Afterward, I wrote a thumbnail sketel. which I titled: "Meeting Mike."
Friday-I called Bob Horne to thank him for his presentation of my poem and on his editorial comment about all of us being equal in God's sight. Called Connee to share my excitement about getting the poem in the Robesonian, as it has a special message for other whites who have grown up with fear and prejudice the way I did.
Tuesday-Bob Horne called to say he thought he could use the "Mobile Homes" poem. He asked for some information about my family. (I told him Gordon was six in 1970. Actually, Gordon had just turned five when I started putting the poem together. He was not six until the very end of that year. This explains the fact that he was fifteen and a half when he was killed in the accident in 1980).

Thursday-I learned that the "Mobile Homes" poem was in the Robesonian, so I bought both a Robesonian and an Indian Voice. A thrilling experience (for someone who used to wonder what writers are really like) to have one of my writings on each of those two editorial pages n the very same day. I wrote the poem with the Robesonian in mind. Waited 18 years to take it, even though former editor Jack Sharpe's wife and sister seemed impressed when I shared it during a PSU writing class we were taking in the early eighties.
 I forgot to attend the Indian Solidarity meeting.
 Connee made the comment that we get so involved with the negatives in our county that we tend to overlook the positives. I mentioned that I've found--to my surprise--a large number of whites in Robeson County who really want an equal opportunity for everyone in this county.

 I've been wondering since then what could be accomplished if each of us writing in the Indian Voice were to list one positive accomplishment (by a person or group) each week--similar to Barbara Braveboy Locklear's encouraging stories about individuals and couples living in this county. While emphasizing negatives tends to drive people apart, accentuating positives can bring people closer together.
