

SHARE YOUR LODGING EXPERIENCE

If you are a transplant recipient or a caregiver, please share your housing experience by completing Aarolyns House of Hope survey.

The survey will take just 10 minutes of your time. The information is needed to support what we already know intuitively – a transplant hospitality house is truly needed in the Detroit area for recipients and their caregivers.

Please spread the word about the survey to other transplant families so we get even more information....Thank you!

AAROLYNS
HOUSE OF HOPE
FOR TRANSPLANT FAMILIES

AAROLYN
MCCULLOUGH
FOUNDER

After Aarolyn's life-saving transplant in 2011, her life changed profoundly. As soon as she was able, she became a volunteer transplant ambassador at Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit. In her current role of teaching transplant candidates, recipients, and caregivers about the life changes following their "gift of life", she has heard stories of significant lodging difficulties and problems maneuvering the process. Some of these stresses are unavoidable, but Aarolyn's House of Hope will be able to relieve concerns about a place to stay, with a caring "community" close to the hospital.

THERE MUST BE SOMETHING BETTER!

When your long-awaited “gift of life” becomes available, you must head to the hospital with a caregiver at your side. You have a hospital bed, but your caregiver must find a place to stay nearby. Right now, a hotel room is the only option.

— This can be expensive and sometimes hard to find

— It's lonely and isolating during this stressful time

— Driving between the hotel and the hospital may lead to the caregiver driving drowsy, a dangerous and worrisome reality

After your “gift of life”, how do you manage since you must be close to the hospital for a period of time?

— Move into your caregiver's hotel room?

— Add to your expenses with a second hotel room?

— Travel back and forth from home, maybe 40, 50, or more miles?

There must be something better!

WHAT IF THERE IS SOMETHING BETTER?

— a place to stay that was warm and caring? Where the caregiver wasn't always alone and could share with others in the same situation? Where there was no burden of huge hotel costs? A place with support and companionship when it's needed most? And - it was close to the hospital?

Aarolyns House of Hope will be just that place – a home-away-from-home. A sanctuary of comfort and compassion where caregivers and recipients traveling the same journey can share and care. A place that models a safe new transplant life-style and wraps you in warmth at the lowest cost possible as a non-profit charitable organization.

“Every time we call a patient in for transplant or they are transferred from across the state, in critical condition, there is no hotel availability for families to stay on such short notice.”

TRANSPLANT RN

“It was 10 p.m. when we were called for his transplant. I spent the night in the surgery waiting room, attempting to find a hotel. I then spent five days in my husband's hospital room. I could not find a hotel because there was an event in town - it was a tough time.”
