

This week on Capitol Hill, the General Assembly was closed for business on Monday in observance of the President’s Day holiday but resumed their regular schedule on Tuesday morning. Both Senate and House Finance, Ways, and Means continued their ongoing budget hearings, preparing for the release of the Governor’s amended budget in the coming weeks.

The Governor’s administrative package is passing through legislative review, including the multiple pieces of his transportation infrastructure overhaul, his tax reform initiatives, legislation continuing his commitment to Tennessee State Parks as well as Tennessee’s education system. Whether or not these initiatives pass as introduced by the administration will be determined in the coming weeks through the legislative and budget making process.

Lieutenant Governor Randy McNally returned for his first full week after having surgery to insert a pacemaker to regulate his heart. The Lieutenant Governor missed only one week of session before returning to the State’s business.

Preliminary calendars have been released showing expected timelines for calendars closing as legislators look towards adjourning the first half of the 113th General Assembly. The Senate Commerce and Labor Committee has asked that all bills to be heard in 2023 be put on notice by Tuesday, February 28th, and several other committees will soon follow suit. While these long final calendars will take several weeks to work through, they have set the pace for adjournment towards the end of April.
