About Harold Vickrey

Harold was the 4th generation of his mother’s family to call Kent home. He told his family to the end, he never wanted to live anywhere else but his hometown.

As a teenager, Harold worked in the crop fields of the Kent Valley, delivered newspapers, worked as an usher in the local theater, helped log old-growth stumps, and even worked on the ferry, Kalakala. After his mother died, he quit school to work for Safeway. Once his boss learned he had quit school, he told Harold he had to go back to school but could keep his job at the store, and later became the store’s assistant manager. Shortly thereafter, he also began driving a school bus for the Kent School District.

Harold opened Kent’s first drive-in restaurant called “Harold’s Royal Freeze” in 1954, with a second location called “Harold’s Drive-In.” On the first day of business, it snowed, and the drive-in took in less than $3. The drive-in’s first cash register was a muffin tin. Harold always produced a quality product, including the Royal Burger, hand cutting his own French Fries daily, using fresh ingredients, and was one of the first in the Seattle area to sell halibut fish and chips, filleting the whole fish himself into a finished product.

Four generations of Harold’s family worked at the business, and he employed generations of Kent teenagers, supported local sports teams, and created a gathering place for the community.

In 1992, Harold retired from the drive-in business, and once again worked for the Kent School District, eventually as Head Custodian at Kentridge High School, retiring in 2016, shortly before his 86th birthday. Harold volunteered in his community, and on two different occasions, the city named a day in his honor.

He was blessed to be loved by so many in his community. He was a good, decent, honest person; always optimistic, with a friendly smile. As so many people witnessed over the years, he had an incredible work ethic.

“I was one of those teenagers employed at Harold’s Drive-In the early 1960’s. This was the local teens gathering spot. A place to get a good hamburger, flirt with girls, show off your car or hang out. Harold brought out the best in young people. He expected hard work and we never let him down.”
