Conferences

Conferences are continuing this week. Please make sure to arrive on time - we want to use every one of those 20 minutes! I am enjoying getting to know you and your child so much! Your insights are very valuable, and I appreciate you taking the time to pop in!

FYI for this week

Due to our half days, we are taking a break from some routine assignments. No spelling, Word Power, Word Hunt. Math will be at school only.

Survival

We have new names!

We have launched our new social studies unit called "Survival." This is about the California Native Americans.

You probably already know that we had an official naming ceremony last Friday. We all have new, genuine California Native American names. BTW, my new name is Coughing Fish.

We will be using these new names exclusively at school until our unit is finished. It is student choice if they want to use their new name at home.

WRITING FYI

Right now our writing unit is narrative writing. Because editing and revising is such a big part of writing, we always do it on our Chrome Books. I provide lots of time in class to work on our writing, but at certain points a specific assignment will be due. That is happening this week. We should finish the first event in our beach narrative on Wednesday. If you need to finish, it is officially homework. If you are done, show mom or dad. They will verify it's done and probably have a few helpful ideas. You can log in to your school account from home on any device. Then it is easy to just finish up. You should have shared it with me on Tuesday so I can see what you wrote.

Native American Extra Credit

We are trying to earn survival points in order to achieve our goal of ending the unit with an Acorn Harvest Festival. To do this, you can work on an extra credit project. Remember, the more points we earn, the more fun we get to have at our festival. (FYI, this is completely optional.)
