

Ready for more snow in Forest Lakes and the high country?? This report just in from the National Weather Service in Flagstaff.....

A complex weather pattern is set to impact northern Arizona beginning this afternoon around 3 PM.

Widespread precipitation will continue through today, especially south of the Mogollon Rim. Snow could mix in at times as low as 6,500-7,000 feet. We can expect periods of heavy rainfall, accumulating snow, gusty winds, and increased flows on waterways.

A second, colder system will begin tonight with increased precipitation coverage and intensity through Wednesday morning. Snow levels will fall quickly overnight. Precipitation will diminish after midday Wednesday.

Snowfall amounts above 7000 feet could be at least 2 feet.

Warm and dry conditions are predicted through the weekend.

In an earlier email report about the recent snow storm, I asked residents to send pictures of their creative ideas with snow. I received only 2 pictures and am sharing them with you. The 3rd picture is thrown in there for anyone who wishes to show family and friends what 2 feet of snow looks like!

Picture #1 – A giant Snow Cone with straw! Blueberry, perhaps??

Picture #2 – A snowman with eyes borrowed from a workbench pegs.

Picture #3 – 2 feet of snow!

If you must be where the snow is, please be careful and be winter prepared. Don't travel for the next couple of days if not absolutely necessary. Enjoy other's pictures!
