

Steve Soriano

We want to express our thanks, and Steve's love, for the wonderful support from his friends. He would want his friends to know how much your many words of encouragement and humor made him incredibly happy. He would always smile when he heard your names or your voices.

Steve loved living in Las Vegas and felt great being in the desert. He felt so lucky that he could be in-and-out of the pool at Larry's house, every day, even in the winter. He read numerous political articles each day and enjoyed talking with his roommates about what was going on. It made Ric and Larry laugh when, in the middle of a debate, Steve would go get his newspaper, and quote lines directly to prove his point.

Steve fought to recover from his stroke for seventeen months. One of his nurses was impressed by how he would intently listen and move in his bed to his favorite Bob Marley songs. She said, at first, she thought he was going to fall out of bed, but then she realized he was just focused and following every beat of the music. We were hoping, when Steve got better, that a first outing could be to the Bellagio, where he could play pool blackjack!

Steve was making good progress until March 2020 when the COVID lockdown was started. It is with heavy hearts that we let you know that Steve passed away from complications of his stroke.

Thanks again from the bottom of our hearts for your many kindnesses and sharing good times.
