Band leader Kenny Lovelace played guitar & fiddle with Jerry Lee Lewis for over 50 years. Photography by Michael Tedesco

LEGENDARY CAREER

PAM WINDSOR

He's a talented multi-instrumentalist whose unique style would land Kenny Lovelace a special place in music history. For more than five decades, he toured with Jerry Lee Lewis as his bandleader, guitarist, and fiddle player.

"He was like a brother to me," Lovelace says of the legendary artist who passed away in October of 2022. "I loved Jerry and had 54 great years with him."

At 89, Lovelace has countless stories from the years he traveled with Lewis, performing with the Rolling Stones, Johnny Cash, Carl Perkins, and so many others.

Lovelace could play guitar on the rock and roll songs like "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" and "Great Balls of Fire," then could switch to the fiddle on the country tunes like "What's Made Milwaukee Famous," "Another Place, Another Time," and "Thirty Nine and Holding."

"Jerry loved the way I played fiddle, and he wanted it on all his records."

That interest in the fiddle began early for Lovelace. Growing up on a farm in Cloverdale, Alabama, his family would pick cotton, hoe corn, and bale hay to make ends meet. Then on Saturday nights, they'd gather together to hear the Grand Ole Opry.

"We didn't have electricity, so we'd listen on an old battery radio. And when the battery started getting weak, we'd lean-in closer to hear the rest of it. I'd listen to Hank Williams Sr and all the guys, the fiddle players, and the different instruments they used. I just loved the music and wanted to learn."

He was four years old when his mother started teaching him chords on the mandolin. The next year, he began learning the guitar. And then, his dad bought him a fiddle.

"He paid five dollars for it, but it only had two strings," says Lovelace. "So, I learned to play on two strings because we didn't have money to buy more. Then later, he did get me two more strings, and that's when I really learned to play fiddle."

He was just a teenager when he began playing with a local band. And one night, the band opened for Hank Williams Sr.

"I was about 14 years old and playing fiddle with a group in Florence, Alabama. That night we played for about 45 minutes, then Hank was running late, so we got to stay on longer."

Williams arrived while Lovelace was still on stage, and later, Lovelace got to meet him.

"I said, 'Mr. Williams, it's a pleasure to meet you,'" Lovelace recalls. "And he said, 'Nice to meet you, son. I heard you playing, you just keep it up.'"

A little more than a decade later, Lovelace would meet Lewis. Lovelace was with a different band then, and Lewis' youngest sister, Linda Gail, sang with them on weekends. One night, her brother had a show across town and came to see her perform. Lewis was impressed by the entire band and commented on how much he enjoyed hearing Lovelace play the fiddle.

A few months later, in May of 1967, Lovelace joined Lewis on the road.

They bonded over the music. On show nights, after the band returned to the hotel, Lewis would often call Lovelace later to see if he was still awake. If so, he'd ask him to bring his fiddle to the room.

"And I'd get there, and we'd play for a couple of hours," Lovelace remembers. "It's where he and I came together. He wanted to hear my fiddle, and we'd play all these old songs, just me and him in his room."

Among the many experiences he shared with Lewis was the night he met Elvis. After wrapping up movies, the singer was ready to return to live shows. He wanted Lewis to come see his show in Las Vegas, and Lovelace got to go along. Afterward, they were invited to hang out with Elvis.

"We were in the dressing room, and Elvis said, 'Jerry, sit down at the piano and hit me a few notes on the keys. And Elvis just leaned up on the piano. If I had a camera with me that night, it would have been a master shot."

Lovelace remains grateful for an incredible career.

"To play with Jerry for all those years and meet the people I've met and do what I've done, it's been wonderful."
