Brandon McCulloch has had a lifetime passion for tractors. Photography by Michael Tedesco

THE TRACTOR WHISPERER

JASON ZASKY

“Every tractor has a story, and it’s always interesting when you find someone who knows the story behind a tractor. Including how they acquired it and what they did to it to get it running,” begins Brandon McCulloch, a longtime antique tractor collector who has had a passion for old tractors since he was old enough to ride one.

Today, McCulloch owns nine antique tractors, with a 1939 Ford 9N being the oldest in his collection. He also owns a 1953 Ford Golden Jubilee, thus named because 1953 was the 50th anniversary of Ford’s life as a manufacturing company.

“Usually these tractors are American-made—in the 1930s, 40s, 50s or 60s, but even into the late 70s and early 80s,” relates McCulloch, with brand names like John Deere, Case, Oliver and Allis Chalmers among those you’re most likely to find at antique tractor shows.

“I go to 15-20 shows annually. Most times I am exhibiting, but sometimes I just attend a show,” says McCulloch, who says he regularly travels to Alabama, Florida, and Georgia to go to shows, not to mention Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois.

“Last year we went to West Bend, Wisconsin, for the Classic Green Reunion,” he adds, an event held every other year for John Deere enthusiasts. “And this year we are contemplating doing the Mackinaw Bridge Antique Tractor Crossing,” referring to an annual event to be held September 12-13 in 2026, with hundreds of tractors expected to cross Michigan’s famous Mackinaw Bridge during the ride.

More notably, perhaps, a number of annual events in Spring Hill also feature antique tractors, including Founder’s Day, though “the FFA Tractor Show at Spring Hill High School is probably the biggest show we do,” relates McCulloch.

“Most of the tractors that people show have a pretty cush life.

They don't work anymore because you have so much money tied up in paint and body work and whatnot," he continues, noting that it isn't especially costly to acquire an antique tractor. It's the restoration costs that make the hobby much more taxing.

"The most I've spent to acquire one is twenty-four hundred dollars. And the Golden Jubilee that I restored? I paid fifteen hundred dollars for the tractor, but the paint and everything I did to it cost me close to six thousand. It's housed in an enclosed cargo trailer along with a golf cart, and I take it to tractor shows," he says.

But restoration is a job that the central Georgia native is well-suited for, as he's a master GM tech and master Saturn tech who worked for General Motors in Atlanta for 15 years before moving to Spring Hill to finish out the rest of his career.

"I understand high-tech cars, but antique tractors are so simple they are just easy to work on," says the former Saturn man, who notes that he frequently does restoration work for other enthusiasts.

"One person here in Spring Hill calls me 'The Tractor Whisperer.' He had a 1948 Ferguson that hadn't been started in 30 years. I got it running, and today he's using it to mow," says McCulloch, who recalls that the job included cleaning out the fuel tank and re-wiring the tractor, among other things.

"The main thing is to make sure the engine turns over. It will usually seize up from sitting a long time, and the engine will lock up," he notes, thankful that he was able to get the Ferguson running again.

One might think McCulloch would have a personal favorite tractor, but if he does, he's not saying.

"The favorite is the one I'm sitting on at the time," he quips, before getting a little sentimental.

"I like that these old tractors were all made in America, by American workers who got paid good wages that provided for American families. We've lost that," he laments. "But every component—when they were built—was made in the United States."

McCulloch says other tractor enthusiasts get similarly sentimental when they attend tractor shows or tractor auctions.

"It always brings back memories when people get a chance to walk around and look at all the different tractors," he concludes.

FALL FUNDRAISER PIVOTS FROM PUMPKINS TO PUTTERS

The Cooper Trooper Foundation announced a transition from their well-known “Pumpkin Patch” Fundraiser of 16 years. This September the nonprofit will hold their first annual Charity Golf Classic at Franklin Bridge Golf Club, during childhood cancer awareness month. The event will feature exciting contests, swag bags, a raffle, golf air cannon, prizes, breakfast from Big, Bad Breakfast, and lunch. Personalized signs honoring and remembering children diagnosed with cancer and their siblings will be displayed along the course and can be purchased with a $100 tax-deductible donation. Visit website or <https://linktr.ee/thecoopertrooperfoundation> for more information.

The event will take place on Thursday September 10. The golf tournament will begin with an 8 am shotgun start, with registration beginning at 7 am.

Cooper Trooper Foundation announced a transition from their well-known “Pumpkin Patch” Fundraiser of 16 years. This September the nonprofit will hold their first annual Charity Golf Classic at Franklin Bridge Golf Club, during childhood cancer awareness month. Cooper Trooper Foundation’s Pumpkin Patch fundraiser in front of Walgreens became a well-loved community staple, but will no longer be operated by the foundation. The great news is that pumpkins can still be purchased at that location. Nashville Pumpkin Co. is partnering with Cooper Trooper and will be generously donating a portion of sales back to Cooper Trooper Foundation. We hope the community will continue purchasing their “pumpkins for a purpose” from Nashville Pumpkin Co. at 530 Cool Springs Blvd. in Franklin.
