BLUEGRASS ALONG THE HARPETH

PAM WINDSOR

Tommy Jackson has been clogging and teaching it to others for decades. The Franklin native is the founder of the Rocky Top Revue, a local group that strives to keep the art form alive. He shared his love for Appalachian folk dancing with his parents, who were cloggers themselves and often traveled to neighboring states to compete. It was their dedication to dancing, and the music behind it, that led them to form Bluegrass Along the Harpeth.

"We were coming back from a dance contest down in Alabama," Jackson recalls, "and on the way home Mother said, 'Why do we travel to all these events, but we don't have one in our own hometown?' That was sometime in July, and we had the first one that September. We pulled it off in just two months."

Thirty-five years later, Bluegrass Along the Harpeth is still going strong. It's become a much-loved event that takes place on the Town Square in downtown Franklin.

This year, the event will be held July 24-25. The two-day festival starts Friday night with live music (from 7 to 10pm), then continues Saturday (9am to 10pm) with competitions, arts and crafts, vendors, food trucks, and much more. Throughout the day, artists and bands will compete in a wide range of individual and group categories. Jackson says there's no one category that's more popular than the other.

"It depends on what you like. Some like the guitar, some like the mandolin, some like the banjo, and some like the old-time singing. My favorite is something we created about five years ago called the Bluegrass Open. We put different songs in envelopes, and these bands draw a song, then have 10 minutes to learn and perform it. It is phenomenal to see how these musicians can adjust and adapt that quickly.”

The festival is free and open to the public. And Jackson says they keep entry fees to a minimum to encourage artists to attend and compete. There are no entry fees for the band competition, and individual artists pay just $3.

“Some of these other competitions have forgotten the most important people at a bluegrass festival are the artists,” Jackson explains. “Because if they don’t show up, you don’t have anything. We want you to feel like you’re the show, we come to see you. We even have a hospitality room set aside for the musicians.”

And for musicians wanting to compete, there’s still time.

“You don’t have to pre-register. When you get there on Saturday, just go to the registration table and sign up. You can register all the way up until the event is called to the stage.”

Jackson says they’re able to keep costs low thanks to the overwhelming support of area businesses.

“This would not be possible without the community getting behind us. We’ve been very blessed to have a lot of support.”

One business has even provided fans to set up in tents near the stage to accommodate older adults who often struggle with the summer heat. Jackson says they want to make sure people of all ages can attend.

“This is a family-oriented festival from start to finish. It’s affordable, we want you to bring your kids, and there’s no alcohol here. Since we started, our philosophy has been, we want to give you entertainment where you don’t have to worry about anything except having fun.”

While it’s a “bluegrass” festival, in light of America’s 250th celebration, there will be both a country band and a bluegrass band on stage Friday night.

“We want to remind people country music derived from bluegrass music,” says Jackson. “In fact, a lot of people don’t realize pretty much every type of music, from gospel to rap, you name it, all came from the Appalachians and the old-time bluegrass music.”

It’s a genre that people have loved for years. And Jackson says, for people who aren’t familiar with it, Bluegrass Along the Harpeth is the perfect place to learn more about it.

“It’s something unique because if you’ve never been to a bluegrass festival, when you come to this one, you’re going to catch the fever.”

WILLIAMSON MEDICAL CENTER RECEIVES FIVE STARS FROM THE CENTERS FOR MEDICARE & MEDICAID

Williamson Medical Center, the flagship facility of Williamson Health, has been awarded a five-star rating from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) for 2026. CMS assigns Overall Hospital Quality Star Ratings based on performance across several categories tied to patient outcomes, safety and experience.

Williamson Medical Center is among only six five-star hospitals in the state of Tennessee, one of three in Middle Tennessee and one of only 384 nationwide. The overall star rating is awarded from data collected across the following measure groups.

The CMS five-star rating is among several recent prestigious recognitions received by Williamson Health this year, joining honors from The Leapfrog Group, Forbes, Newsweek, CareChex® and others that reflect the organization's continued focus on delivering high-quality, patient-centered care.

For Williamson Health's comprehensive list of services, visit williamsonhealth.org/
