ACCEPTING NEW PATIENTS

We are new to the area, and a friend referred us to Berry Farms Dental. Everyone in the family has gone, we've had cleanings, cavities, and caps. I could not be happier with the level of service. We have been in and out quickly, never waiting long, I feel heard and respected as a mom, and my kids were treated so gently, kindly and respectfully through the whole process.

I cannot recommend highly enough. – First Name

Songwriter and producer Keith Stegall has spent a lifetime in music. Photography by Michael Tedesco

KEITH STEGALL, LOCAL GRAMMY WINNER

JASON ZASKY

The path to getting started in the music business can be nebulous. But Keith Stegall's upbringing prepared him well for a career as a songwriter and producer.

"My dad was a guitarist who played in a band with Johnny Horton, who was a big country star in the late 1950s. And my mom was a writer who penned short stories," begins Stegall, who says his parents helped him develop the skills that would enable him to write both music and lyrics.

"Also, my uncle had a recording studio, so by the time I was six or seven years old, I was in the studio and learning about the recording process," he continues.

Yet it wasn't until Stegall met country music legend/actor Kris Kristofferson that he considered pursuing his music career in Nashville, rather than moving from Louisiana to the West Coast.

"Kristofferson was doing a show at my college, and I got to speak with him backstage and play him a couple of my songs in a little dressing room. He said, 'You need to get your ass to Nashville,'" Stegall says.

Before long, Stegall did just that, and in three short years, he landed a publishing deal. Then, in 1980, he had his first hit song, called "Sexy Eyes," by Dr. Hook.

"It was the disco era, and if you were at a skating rink in 1980, you would have heard that song, because it was a global hit," he says.

Stegall would go on to record two solo albums—Keith Stegall (1985) and Passages (1996)—, but he has achieved his greatest critical and commercial success writing songs and producing albums for other artists, including Randy Travis, who helped kick-start Stegall's production career.

In the years since, he has won countless awards as a songwriter and producer, including a Grammy for Country Album of the Year in 2013, having produced Uncaged by the Zac Brown Band. He also won 1991 ACM Album of the Year for producing Don't Rock the Jukebox for Alan Jackson, and 1991 ACM Single of the Year for the album's title track, which he co-wrote with Jackson.

Stegall likens being a music producer to being the director of a movie.

"You are responsible for all the moving parts, including giving guidance to the musicians, guidance to the artist, and creating a comfort zone for the artist so they can do their best work," he explains. "It's a lot of different things, but it's a major support role for creative people."

Stegall cites 2003's ACM Single of the Year as a representative example of how a producer can shape the creative process.

"I had been pitched a demo for 'It's Five O'Clock Somewhere' by one of the writers, and when we first tracked it, I tried to copy the demo. But it just didn't fit Alan Jackson," recalls Stegall. "Jimmy Buffett heard the track and said, 'Damn, Alan, you're starting to sound like one of my records,' at which point Alan said, 'You need to make it sound like me.' There was that moment when Alan became sensitive about that and wanted it to be branded as his basic sound and not be chasing what Buffett was doing."

In that way, being a producer is not unlike being an editor.

"Someone can say one thing that changes the whole direction, so it's always an open forum for people to contribute. Part of my job is to filter everything and say, 'You're right, let's give that a shot.' Or 'No, I don't hear it that way,'" relates Stegall, before noting that he is as excited as ever about finding a new artist with extraordinary talent—or writing that next hit song.

And while his approach to writing and recording remains much the same as it has for years, Stegall is not opposed to change. For example, he recently acquired Creative Workshop, a historic Nashville recording studio. He's even learning about AI, trying to ascertain if it can help him do better work.

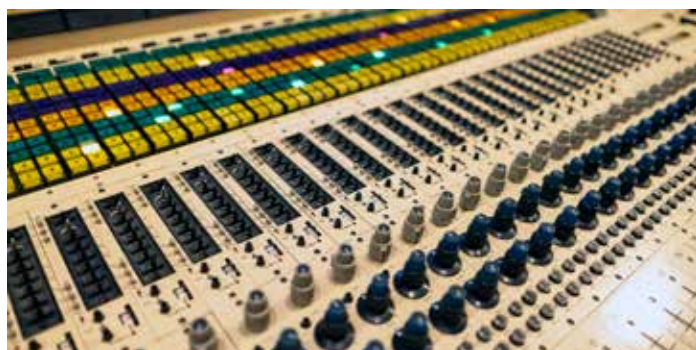

"We can all bitch and moan about AI, but it's not going to go away. It's only going to become more refined and play a bigger part in what we do. I have to learn how to utilize AI, but not let it change the way I make records," he says, emphasizing that he would never use AI to generate music or lyrics. "I'm just becoming acquainted with what is possible. There are certain things I can use AI for and certain things I would not use it for."

One thing that doesn't figure to change, though, is Stegall's home address.

"I bought property in Maury County 14 years ago, right after Clay Walker, who lives across the road from me," he offers. Stegall loves that his spread is close enough to Nashville to allow for a reasonable commute, but still decidedly 'out in the country.'

"I get enough of the buzzsaw that is the music business," he concludes, "and it's nice to be able to get away from it and not be saturated by it."

Lawrence Smathers' clock repair service is in high demand. Photography by Michael Tedesco

CLOCK DR. MAKES HOUSE CALLS

PAM WINDSOR

Lawrence Smathers has always had a fascination with how things work, as well as an ability to build, repair, or fix them.

"It set me up for troubleshooting," he says. "I guess my brain works a little differently. I'm also left-handed, so when I look at something, I can kind of see how it works, maybe a little faster than some people."

It's led to some unique, highly specialized jobs over the years.

He worked on helicopters as an Aviation Structural Mechanic in the Navy. After fourteen years, he switched to the Air Force, where he became a Hydraulics Technician, working on planes. When he retired from the military, he went to school to learn to make prosthetic arms and legs and did that for a company in Murfreesboro. Then, about five years ago, he became interested in clocks and clock repair.

"It's kind of interesting how I got into it," he recalls. "I have a grandfather clock and had a guy come out to service it. I started talking to him about what he does and realized I'd really like to learn how to do that."

He pursued professional training, first through courses offered by the National Association of Watch & Clock Collectors (NAW-CC), and then completed the Gem City College Clock Repair Program in Illinois.

When he launched his Clock Doctor business, he decided a mobile operation would work best. Grandfather clocks, wall clocks, and even mantle clocks are often too heavy to move, making transporting them difficult for customers.

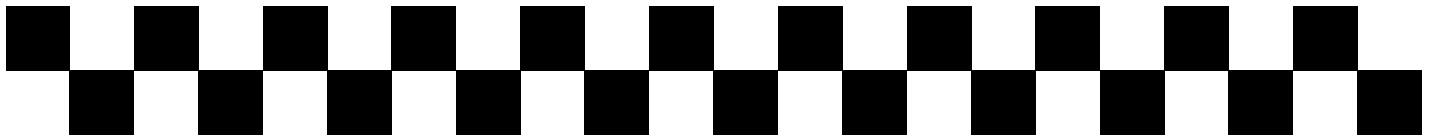

"I make house calls Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and every other Saturday," Smathers explains. "I typically try to set up two appointments on each day. Tuesday and Thursdays are my in-shop days where I work on clocks I have to bring back for servicing."

Most of the time, he's able to complete the work at the owner's home.

"My goal is to repair it on site, if possible. That way, no one loses their clock, and I'm not trying to transport it back where it might get damaged. My ideal setup is to go in, even if it takes me three or four hours, which it sometimes does for grandfather clocks, and get that thing as clean and refurbished without disassembling it as I can, then get it back working."

He strives to keep calls within an hour of Spring Hill, but with clock repair businesses so rare these days, he's in high demand.

"I travel a lot. I've gone up to Kentucky, I've gone to Georgia, and Alabama. I try to keep it close to home, but I'll get calls from people in Knoxville or Chattanooga saying, 'I can't find anybody, I'll pay you to come out and fix my clock.'"

In addition to repairing clocks, he also cleans and maintains them.

"Each one has its own little formula, as far as how often a clock should be cleaned. I say every three to five years, depending on the environment they're in."

He finds his work extremely rewarding.

"I'm always learning, and that keeps me interested. There are plenty of times I'll be working on something and say to myself, wow, I've never seen that before. I've worked on a couple of clocks from the mid-1800s or even older. A few months ago, I did one where the works inside were about 80 percent wood with all wooden gears and just a couple of metal pieces. Every clock is different, and it's cool to work on those older ones that are part of history."

Many of the clocks have deep sentimental value to their owners. Smathers finds it gratifying when he can bring them back to life.

"It can be very emotional because maybe their grandfather clock belonged to a special family member and the clock hasn't made a sound in twenty, thirty, or forty years. I come in and am able to get it operating again. And the tears start flowing, or they start clapping and jumping up and down when they suddenly hear it again. It makes me happy to be able to do that."

Clocks, he says, are truly something special.

"A clock makes a home. It just completes it."

To contact Smathers, you can visit his website at clockdoctortn.squarespace.com/ or call (615) 664-8571.
