Logline and Synopsis

LOGLINE: In 2001, Will, now a survivor in his thirties, is determined to break the silence, confront the truth, and seek justice after he and many other young black boys were molested in 1981 by a white Red Sox clubhouse manager at Florida's Chain of Lakes Ballpark, where the team held spring training and the boys worked as Clubbies.

SYNOPSIS: Predator in the Clubhouse: The Boston Red Sox Child Molestation Story is a dramatic account of child sexual abuse and institutional exploitation, set at a Boston Red Sox spring training facility in Winterhaven, Florida, in the 1980s, and framed by the recollections of Will, an adult survivor, now 35, who tells his story in 2001 to Doctor Ross during a therapy session. It is based on actual events. The story follows a pattern in which a trusted adult, Fitzy, with access, authority, and community credibility, gradually gains influence over vulnerable young boys and their families. Through promises of opportunity, mentorship, financial help, gifts, and proximity to professional sports and athletes, the abuser is portrayed as creating a system of dependency and silence that is difficult for children to resist and for adults around them to recognize. Fitzy was a Boston Red Sox Clubhouse Manager who visited their neighborhoods and recruited these young boys, who would later work at the facility as Clubbies. Fitzy died in 2005, but the victims' stories have never been told... Until now. Predator in the Clubhouse: The Boston Red Sox Child Molestation Story is one of the most eye-opening and compelling untold stories of child sexual abuse within a sports organization in history.

Overall, the script tells a story about grooming, power, denial, and the long-term human cost of institutional failure. Rather than functioning only as a personal tragedy, it frames the events as part of a larger pattern in which access, admiration, and authority can be weaponized against children. Its primary dramatic force comes from showing how abuse can remain hidden in plain sight when communities trust the wrong people, dismiss early signs, and fail to listen to the most vulnerable.

Lead Character Descriptions

- Teen Will: (black Male, age 15) Lead role- Will as one of the teenagers who was sexually abused by Fitzy. Quirky, naïve, and a basketball star at his ethnically diverse high school.
- Fitzy: (white Male, 57) Lead role – Predator who sexually abuses Will and the other Clubbies.
- Shirley: (black female, 35-40) Supporting role – Will's very strict mother, who is very strong.
- Oldest Will: (black male, 35) Supporting role – Teen Will, now grown, tells his story of sexual abuse to a psychiatrist.
- Mr. Roberts: (white male, 40) Supporting role – The principal of Teen Will's High School. He is somewhat of a racist and does not like the blacks at the school, including Will, to associate with the white students. He becomes a thorn in Teen Will's side and does find a good reason to expel him.
- Coach: (black male, 35) Supporting role – Young Will's basketball coach at the high school. He truly believes in Will and sees his potential.

Key Crew Statements

- Ryan Coogler, Producer:
- Antoine Fuqua, Director:
- Gary Tavares, Screenwriter: “This film will have an enormous impact on viewers. Particularly to parents or guardians of young boys or children. It will raise their awareness about where they send their children and how safe these establishments and organizations are. Other viewers will become aware of yet another major, popular, sports organization who had a child sexual predator in their higher ranks. I feel it is imperative we expose these predators wherever they are, and continue to do it in the media and film, where potentially millions can be reached. This film will leave audiences breathless and more educated about this issue.”
