Wisconsin United for Freedom Press Release

Wisconsin United for Freedom (WUFF) supports a vaccination framework that puts informed consent, medical transparency, and parental choice at the forefront. Families deserve policies anchored in clear, publicly accessible evidence—not institutional assumptions—so that each parent can decide what’s right for their child without coercion, mandates, or one-size-fits-all directives. We believe any immunization schedule that governs millions of children should be built on fully transparent evidence reviews, including plain-language disclosures of benefits, limits, and known or potential risks, and should be continually re-evaluated as new data emerge. That expectation is especially important when advisory bodies revise schedules or clinical guidance.

To rebuild trust, WUFF advocates several practical guardrails for any immunization policy that touches children:

1. Expanded safety testing of vaccines where they are studied against a true saline placebo.
2. Independent evidence summaries (separate from agencies that vote on policy) that plainly describe safety signals, study limitations, confidence levels, and remaining uncertainties.
3. True shared decision-making for pediatric vaccines. Doctors should be encouraged to listen to their patients and be free to make recommendations for or against vaccination based on their medical training and consultation with their patients. Doctors should not be receiving pressure or coercion from insurance companies, hospital systems, or the government to have high vaccination rates.

In short, WUFF stands firmly with families who want to make vaccination choices without undue pressure. We support health policies that respect bodily autonomy, require clear and complete safety accounting, and ensure that parents, not the government, are the final decision makers for their children. WUFF emphasizes consent, transparency, and accountability, so that every Wisconsin family can make truly informed health decisions.
