Judging Criteria

#Originality: ability to propose something new and/or different than the offer currently present in the market. Does your idea propose something that isn't being addressed by the market?

Tips for improve the originality of your idea:

- Remember that to be original you do not have to propose something revolutionary as long as you generate a value to your potential consumers that nobody else is providing. To score highly on this criterion, it is very important to know the current state of the market, to know the "competitors" that are already addressing your same issue and to clearly communicate to the judges why your idea adds value to what the competitors are doing.

#Feasibility: the extent to which the idea can be successfully realized. Does the idea have clear, realistic and achievable goals?

Tips for improve the feasibility of your idea

- To score highly on this criterion it is important to think of an idea that proposes a solution to the consumers' need that can be concretely realized and implemented. You have to show to the judges that you know what are the steps needed to practically turn your idea into a concrete product/service.

#Business potential: the extent to which the idea can succeed and be easily adopted by consumers and employed in their everyday lives.

Tips for improve the feasibility of your idea

- In order to score highly on this criterion, it is important to know your market segment and your competitive advantage. Who are your consumers? What do they like? What do they do? Why they should choose you over the competitors? Why will they adopt your idea in their lives? Are you the first mover in the market proposing something revolutionary? Are you solving a problem that other competitors are already solving but in a different and innovative way?

#Presentation Quality: the ability to present and communicate your idea with clarity, completeness, and persuasiveness and to respond exhaustively to the judges' questions.

Tips for improve the quality of your presentation

- To score highly on this criterion it is important to follow the be^E presentation form, to create slides clean with few words: don't use 10 words when 5 are enough. The mentorship sessions are a unique opportunity to improve the presentation quality, attend and pay attention to your mentor's tips.

Five questions that you should try to answer preparing your presentation:

- 1. What's the PROBLEM?
- 2. What's your SOLUTION?
- 3. Do you have a MARKET?
- 4. Who is the COMPETITION?
- 5. What makes you so SPECIAL?
