Escape from Perihelion by Diego Tovar takes place in a scorched, climate-ravaged future, with Earth as a wasteland. The situation is worsened by environmental injustice and extractive capitalism. The people are divided into two classes: the privileged “insiders” of the domed Los Angeles and the “outsiders” of Nova Angeles. The insiders are the powerful class who discriminate against the outsiders. Araya Santera and Zaheen Mandisa have always dreamed about building a life together, but that dream is shattered when Araya is drafted and sent off to mine the energy-rich red lustronium on Mars’s Perihelion facility. Separated from each other by two planets, Zaheen starts a rebellion through the Sand Alliance. Will the resistance succeed in bringing Araya home and destroying Victor Kol, who owns the deadly mines on Mars and also controls the life-sustaining dome on Earth?

Diego Tovar has crafted an imaginative book that had me thinking about capitalist greed and how millionaires can destroy life and the world with their greed. The story is very resonant, especially when one thinks about billionaires about to become trillionaires in our lifetime. With intelligence and clever plotting, the author examines the consequences of greed, painting a world that will delight fans of The Hunger Games series. The writing and the descriptions are terrific, capturing a dying Earth and the dangers of mining the red lustronium. The worldbuilding is atmospheric, with imagery like the relentless sand, the scorching heat, and the toxic dust. The narrative is delivered in dual perspectives, following the characters on Earth and on Mars. This novel asks the question: What does it take for humanity to reclaim Earth from the destruction of greedy capitalists? Escape from Perihelion is a novel of resistance that is well-paced and packed with the kind of energy that makes it hard to put down."
