

Lindsay R. Hartz

Sussex County has been “home” since my birth in 1983, to both my parents since 1936 (William Rogers Hartz) and 1950 (Beverly Pittman Hartz), and to generations before them since the early 1900’s. Today, I am fortunate to call Wakefield home with my husband, Jason Marshall, whose family also has extensive roots, on both the Dunn and Marshall sides, in Sussex County and our dog, Seamus. My early education was within Sussex County at Tidewater Academy, which was followed by the opportunities and love of football I found at Virginia Tech. After graduating cum laude from Virginia Tech, I taught SOL (Standards of Learning) Remediation in the Suffolk Public School System before attending Regent University School of Law.

After graduation from law school and passing the Virginia Bar Exam in 2008, I clerked for three Judges at the Family Court of the State of Delaware, then returned to Richmond, Virginia, where I was employed to ensure compensation to the victims of the BP Deep Water Horizon Disaster. I then gained two years of experience with established Richmond law firms before opening my own law practice, Hartz Law, P.C., in February 2013 and then opening a satellite office in Sussex County in August 2019.

I am a litigator through and through, spending most days in the courtrooms of the 6th (Sussex, Surry, Greensville/Emporia, Brunswick, Prince George, and Hopewell) and 12th (Chesterfield and Colonial Heights) Districts advocating on behalf of defendants, parents, and, most importantly, children, through my domestic relations and Guardian ad Litem practice. Over the past 7 ½ years, my practice has grown and thrived even in difficult economies. I have been fortunate to surround myself with positive and intelligent people who have helped me continue my successful solo practice. I take tremendous pride in having built Hartz Law, P.C., and it will be quite difficult to no longer work solely to help those I have seen through difficult times. I can only close this practice because I know it is time to serve my fellow citizens of Sussex County with the same honesty, integrity, zeal, and compassion known by my clients.

Campaign website: www.LindsayHartz.com