Sergio Cercado, had his MRI Wednesday and is waiting for results. They will then decide what course to take with his back.

Vicenta Cercado, Sergio's mother was diagnosed with gangrene on her toe. They will be amputating in the near future. They have identified another toe on the opposite foot starting the same condition, the consequence of poor circulation. She and the family need prayers as they deal with this situation. Please keep them in prayer.

Tammy's Touch

My teenage son asked me yesterday what my favorite way to study the Bible is. I paused and thought, and it took me longer to answer than I thought it might.

I get asked this question (or some variation of it) regularly. I should have a ready answer, no?

But picking a favorite method almost feels like picking a favorite child. They're all different. They afford different vantage points, cause me think and look, notice and understand, differently.

Perhaps it's a personality peg, but I think the greatest growth comes when I mix the long and slow, the distance running, with sprints. Dancing between the two energizes my study time.

Currently I'm sprinting. Drinking in large gulps. I've never read cover to cover at this rate before, and I've already noticed links and connections I failed to notice in my slower strides.

So what is the best method to study the Bible?

The method that you will be committed to and faithful with.

The method you will humbly offer to the Lord, that He might grow you here.

The method that fits your season of life. (Cover to cover in 90 days is not for every season, friend).
