

Editor's Letter- Kernow Edition

Editor's Letter

Historically speaking, Cornwall has had many names: Kernow by the Cornish, Cornubia by the Romans, Cornwallis by the Anglo-Saxons, and Cernyw by the Welsh. But at NHP, we call it home, which is why we decided to base our first edition on Cornwall. Within these pages, you will find stories about Cornwall, ranging from Cornish myths and legends to popular wading birds you may spot on the shores of our beaches, to what you may see when you dive below Cornish waters. We hope that wherever you are, and wherever you picked up this magazine, you can be transported to the beautiful region of Cornwall. And if you are lucky enough to have spent any time in Cornwall, we hope this serves as a little piece of home. Explore, educate, and inspire. These three words encapsulate what this magazine publication intends to achieve. Explore: Our magazine encourages its readers to go out and explore, to get lost in nature, get uncomfortable, get tired, get dirty, and find the adventure that lies in wait for you. Educate: In this publication, we aim to produce academically rigorous and engaging content that educates our readers on the subject matter, offering deeper insight into the scientific and historical stories of our natural world. Inspire: We hope our magazine will inspire readers to go out into the world to discover that adventure and uncover new stories to share. I want to thank my wonderful editorial board for spending hours at a time pouring so much effort into creating this magazine, for all the discussions, arguments, and spam texts they have had to sit through. I want to thank the contributors who have made the beautiful pieces and articles featured throughout this magazine for finding these unique stories and entrusting them to us to display. And finally, I want to thank you, our audience, for supporting this publication and for holding us to a high enough standard that makes us work tirelessly to produce a body of work of which we can all be proud.
