MATE

RIALS

The ancient Egyptians were keen on employing a wide range of materials in their structures and monuments as well as tomb slabs. Local quarries were exploited to make religious and secular buildings. They used limestone and preferred black, grey, and red granite from Aswan over the rest of the stones. The quarries surrounding Aswan illustrate the ancient Egyptian techniques for quarrying and cutting the stone that makes up Giza's Great Pyramid.

It was used for the making of obelisks in which was believed by the ancient Egyptians that the God Ra would continue to live in. Monuments, ceremonial vases, and statues in Ancient Egypt were constructed using granite that was mined locally.

Natural stones hardness and resistance ensured that it became the predominant construction material in the ancient period.
