PROFESSIONAL PROFILE

Your CV will most likely go unnoticed if the Profile section is not eye-catching. In this part, you should state your qualifications, not your goals. This will allow your hiring manager to decide if your skills match the company's goals. Putting your professional name with the experience years in the first sentence will make the Profile section even more alluring. Keeping this section short, about five sentences, makes it more professional.

In this area, try to describe your achievements, responsibilities. If you are not sure if the company you worked in is small and not known enough, briefly describe what it does. There are cases when a small company provides goods or services for the giants of the industry. If you have worked in a similar company, also mention those giants. Doing so may change the perspective of the HR about the small company.

Feel free to list your skills, areas of expertise, achievements. Try to put your strong sides to show that you will be an excellent asset to the company. However, never put incorrect information.

- Every lie in your resume will make you seem less professional. Creating an attractive CV with an even better Profile Section may seem a daunting task. However, it is worth doing. You will understand it when you receive news of being hired.

To stand out, create your resume with your sentences, avoid copy/pasting responsibilities from the website of the company you left, and facts instead of comments or references. Escape using long sentences here as well.
