

A Multidisciplinary Approach to Cancer Care

Evidence-informed. Person-centred. Whole-circle support.

A cancer diagnosis affects more than the person receiving treatment. Our service supports patients together with their partners, children, carers and families through professional counselling, cancer education and specialised rehabilitation. Every consultation combines cancer education, communication support, professional counselling and specialised rehabilitation to help people understand their diagnosis, make informed healthcare decisions and feel supported throughout treatment, recovery and beyond.

Hearing & Communication Support

As a specialist rehabilitative audiologist, hearing, listening and communication form an important part of every consultation. Cancer treatment can affect hearing, tinnitus, concentration and communication, while changes in hearing may influence relationships, confidence and quality of life. Practical rehabilitation strategies are integrated throughout care to help people remain connected with those around them.

Cancer Education

Understanding cancer should not feel overwhelming. We provide clear, personalised education about diagnosis, pathology, treatment and what to expect, helping people take part confidently in decisions alongside their healthcare team.

Support for Families

Cancer affects the whole circle of care. Professional counselling and education are available not only for patients, but also for partners, carers, children and other family members navigating the emotional and practical effects of cancer.

Inclusive, Culturally Safe Care

Everyone deserves to feel respected, understood and supported. We welcome people from all cultures and backgrounds and provide culturally safe, family-centred care. Drawing on more than twenty years of experience working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities throughout regional and rural Queensland, we are committed to respectful and inclusive support.

Practical Financial Guidance

Cancer can bring unexpected financial pressures. Our Co-Director is a licensed financial professional who is available to provide practical guidance and support alongside our allied health services.

Supporting You. Supporting Your Circle.

Our multidisciplinary approach brings together rehabilitation, education, counselling and communication support to care for the whole person - and the people who care for them.
