Invasive Watch: Teasel

Spring is a good time to work on non-native invasive plants. One plant the Land Stewardship Unit at MetroParks targets this time of year is Teasel. Two types grow in the MetroParks, common teasel and cut-leaved teasel. Common Teasel has purple flowers and cut-leaved has white flowers. Teasel is a biennial that grows during its first season as a rosette and then in its second year produces a flowering stalk. It is highly competitive and will grow in dense patches. Each plant can produce up to 2,000 seeds and if left untreated can form dense monocultures that outcompete native plants (photo 1).

How to identify? Look for the following:

- Large wavy leaves growing in pairs cupping the stem (photo 2).
- Prominent white line dividing leaves.
- Prickly stems.
- Cone shaped flower head with purple or white flowers (photo 3).

MetroParks uses a variety of techniques to control this plant. It is important to match the appropriate control method to the plants life stage and time of year.

If you notice this plant on your property, there are a few methods you can use to control it. For small populations of Teasel you can hand pull the rosettes when the soil is wet. If the plant has flowered, use hand pruners to carefully cut the flower heads, immediately drop into bag, and dispose of. Be careful, seeds easily fall off the head and can be dispersed onto the ground. Do not put this plant in your compost, because it will spread. You should also revisit the plant throughout the growing season because it will likely grow new flower heads.

For larger areas, you can mow the area frequently to prevent the plant from flowering. One mowing will not be enough because it will produce new flower heads after the first cutting. Often a foliar spray application may be necessary. Match the appropriate herbicide to your area and always follow product label guidelines.

It is important not to ignore this plant in your yard or field. Teasel is so aggressive that it will displace the other plants growing in the same area. For questions or more information on invasive plants and plant control, contact the Land Stewardship Unit at MetroParks of Butler County.

MetroParks of Butler County Wildflowers

By Shawnee Banks

Spring has arrived and so have the wildflowers. We investigated some different species at our April wildflower hike at Rentschler Forest MetroPark. Look at some of the species we found!

Bloodroot, a part of the Poppy Family, has a single white flower that grows up through the middle of the leaf (Niering, 1979). The plant produces a red juice from the roots which was used for dyeing clothes and baskets by the Native Americans (Henn, 1998).

Bloodroot at Rentschler Forest MetroPark – Cascades Trail

Rue Anemone, in the Buttercup Family, is a perennial that loves forests and woodland habitats (Henn, 1998). This plant, often mistaken for wood anemone, is made up of three lobed compound leaves with about 2 to 3 flowers per stalk (Niering, 1979; Henn, 1998). Be sure to get out and see this flower soon as it's blooming period is coming to an end.

Rue Anemone at Rentschler Forest MetroPark – Cascades Trail

There are many other wildflowers to watch out for that are currently in bloom including Dutchman's Breeches, Cut-leafed Toothwort, Spring Beauty, Toad Shade (Sessile Trillium), Violets and many more. Be aware of those tricky invasive species that might look beautiful but are harmful to our local biodiversity including Lesser Celandine, Garlic Mustard, Amur Honeysuckle, Periwinkle and more.

Dutchman's Breeches at Rentschler Forest MetroPark – Cascades Trail

Join us in your local MetroParks of Butler County in search of more wildflowers. Be on the lookout for Large Flowered Trillium, Mayapple, and Solomon's Seal soon to bloom (Henn, 1998). Let's get outdoors and find an adventure!
