Happy Howloween!

Letter from the President

Just back from a family vacation to the Outer Banks of North Carolina. Sunday was a beautiful, sunny day with pleasant temperatures and gentle breezes – a perfect day for a wild horse safari. Bouncing along the sand dunes in the back of a Hummer beyond the end of paved roads is a good way to look for wild horses (or to send one off seeking a chiropractor).

As usual, we managed to schedule a visit at the same time that hurricane Maria was passing by offshore in a huff (and puff). Luckily, no significant storm damage or rains, just gusty winds. Trips to the beach were limited by high surf, rip tides, blowing seafoam, and risk of being sandblasted. (Good thing that the sun wasn't out or our shadows would have blown loose!) A few showers fell on Tuesday and Wednesday, but not enough to drown you if you looked up.

Hatteras and Ocracoke Islands were under mandatory evacuation orders for non-residents from Monday until 1pm Thursday, when the bridge from the north reopened. Insult was added to injury for residents of those islands, who had already suffered major power outages earlier in the tourist season due to construction workers accidentally cutting the power cable supplying electricity to the islands. Although the bridge opened too late in the day for a round trip to Ocracoke, we were able to visit the Pea Island bird sanctuary. A little early in the season for most migrants, but at least residual breezes kept predatory mosquitoes at bay.

On Friday, our last full day on OBX, we chartered a half-day pontoon boat cruise in the bay that included dolphin watching, hermit crab racing, lighthouse viewing, bridge construction supervision, visiting a shrimp boat harbor, and harvesting blue crabs. We came away from the ride with a 5-gallon bucket full of crabs – yummy! I've decided that I have no talent for crab shucking. In my humble opinion, crab is a negative-energy food since it takes more energy to extract the meat than calories contained therein. It still is delicious, though, with or without melted butter.

Home again, home again. We are now ready to enjoy autumn in the parks. Lots of activities to look forward to in October: ground breaking ceremonies at Chrisholm MPX for the new Farmstead, grand opening of the Chrisholm Playscape, a fall confetti sunset hike at the Great Miami River, the Howl at VOA, and the Orienteering Trail of Treats at Rentschler MPX.

See you in the parks,
Bill Walker, President FOMPBC

Critter Corner

By Bill Walker

During our recent trip to the Outer Banks we noticed that the wild persimmon trees were full of ripe fruits. We had noticed during an earlier trip that groups of wild horses are frequently found gathered beneath these trees. Our guide during this year's tour informed us that it is not the ripe fruit that draws the horses, but rather the leaves. Turns out that horses, especially wild ones, easily get colic when fed items not usually part of their natural diet.

Since horses cannot vomit, colic can result in gas buildup which can lead to death. Turns out that it is not the fruit which attracts the herd, but rather the leaves. To further complicate things, until the fruit ripens, the leaves are also toxic. It seems likely that sugars present in the leaves when the leaves change color after the fruit ripens may cause the attraction. I asked one of the horses if this was true, but he replied "nay".

The breezy weather during the next few days proved a minor inconvenience to the avian inhabitants of the OBX. As you can see in the following picture of a group of willets, Maria ruffled a few feathers.

See you in the parks!
