

Famous Wanstead Veterans

No. 32 Kofi Agbolegbe

or Kofi The Trophy

When not playing golf in England, Kofi will be found back home in Ghana where half of the countries population keep him comfortable whilst he plays in the early morning cool. It is believed that he takes caddies, spotters, water boys, cleaners, markers, rakers, pitch repairers and even club swingers on a normal 7 ½ hour round. Back in Wanstead he is confused by the reluctance of the Vets section to take up his offer of part time employment which would enable him to play golf in the manner which he is familiar.

A great sport, Kofi enjoys the banter of Vets golf as much as the game itself and, as his nickname suggests, can be guaranteed to be there or thereabouts when silverware is up for grabs. His handicap has been a matter of some debate in the past, but like Brexit, it is now just accepted by most and understood by very few.

His 'liberal' views made him an ideal candidate for JP when his working days had dwindled and many ne'er-do-wells balked when catching sight of His Worship Agbolegbe.

Good fun to be with on the course or the bar, Kofi is still doing great charitable work in the UK for the Ghana Nurses Association and also back in Ghana in numerous projects around the country.
