

Examples of Red Flags:

#1: All watches posted to one of “those forums” (a variant of “Rolex Watches Buy * Sell * Trade” where “*” is a combination of “/”, “space”, “-“, etc.) for just enough below retail to not seem absurd and remain incredibly attractive. Examples:

- a. GMT Master II Pepsi $15k
- b. Starbucks $13k
- c. Rootbeer $15k
- d. And many, many more

When checking the seller's profile, more red flags are seen:

#2 The profile was created just a few months ago.

#3 A few thousand followers, but only a few show up when looking (this happens all the time if the followers are not genuine)

#4 a lifetime of pictures (baby's birth, birthdays, maturing of the family over years) posted on the same date, often very close to the page creation date.

These people are, in truth, pretty good, so there are a few things that might lead you to believe the pages have legitimate content. A big one, which used to be a red flag, but scammers seem to work on correcting is the pictures of the watches looking consistent in format. One might assume they are taken in the same photographic studio. Crooks tend to steal them from legitimate sources. Likely a reputable dealer and/or sites like Chrono24 and Grailzee. Dealers tend to not watermark their advertising pictures, so they tend to be the main (unwilling) source for crooks.

If a page does not present all flags, it may still be run by crooks. If by any chance you see the following message while dealing, RUN.

Business chat

Our process is straightforward and secure. Once you select a watch, I will connect you with the group administrator who manages the transaction. All sales are conducted within our private Facebook group to ensure full transparency. The administrator acts as a neutral escrow, holding funds securely and releasing payment only after the watch has been delivered and confirmed, ensuring protection for both parties.
