HANDCRAFTED KNIVES FOR RUGGED SKILL AND CUSTOM STYLE

Hunting and fishing all his life, Randy Lucius always understood the necessity of a good knife. But it wasn't until his son was gifted a custom knife that Lucius felt the desire to make his own.

"I didn't even know people could make their own knives," Lucius said. "I started doing research on how to make my own and taught myself everything."

After building his own equipment, Lucius began experimenting with different types of handles and blade sizes. In just two years, he has made nearly 70 knives. Lucius puts great care into shaping the grip of each knife, as well as finding the perfect balance for each blade. He believes this is what sets his knives apart from those made in a factory.

"Each knife I make will feel like an extension of the user's arm," Lucius said. "You just don't get that with store-bought knives."
