

YOUR HOME

trend setter

Robin Wilson

When Robin Wilson was a child, her mother used hypoallergenic products and natural cleaning methods in their Austin, Texas, home to help her daughter, who had allergies and asthma, breathe easier. "It was an early introduction to how toxins in the home can affect your health," explains Robin, now a New York City-based interior designer who heralds choices that are healthier for her clients and the earth. So it seems a natural evolution that Robin launched The Nest Store (theneststore.com) this year to bring her favorite eco-friendly products, including her sleek concrete designs, below and right, to retail. The site also offers unique home goods handmade by artisans, as well as renewable products, such as organic cotton towels and bamboo baskets, from manufacturers Robin has vetted to ensure sustainable practices are in place.

Robin Wilson, interior designer for her eponymous firm Robin Wilson Home.

CONCRETE GARDEN In Robin Wilson's concrete designs, fly ash (a byproduct of industrial coal combustion) that's been diverted from landfills replaces sand to create lighter weight results. Above: Cabana Bench, price on request. Left: Nesting Bowls, 3/$95. Far left: Tealight Candleholders, $19 to $40. theneststore.com.