Blake Lively is still trolling her husband Ryan Reynolds — even while social distancing.

The actress, 32, left a hilarious comment on a photoshopped picture of her husband, 43, created by digital satire artist Ronald McDonkey.

In the photo, a man reclines on a conveyer belt in a grocery store wearing a tight-fitting T-shirt with the words "FUN" and a star-spangled speedo with Reynolds' face superimposed over the man's head.

The couple regularly pokes fun at each other on social media. In April, Reynolds called Lively's bluff when she posted a photo of him wearing a tiny ponytail which was meant to make him seem less attractive.

"I dare you to forget this every time you see him for the rest of eternity," Lively joking wrote in the post.

Reynolds shared the photo and joked his wife didn't seem to have any problems with his looks as he quipped back, "Clearly your birth control doesn't work so..."

The two actors share three daughters — James, 5; Inez, 3 and their youngest, 9 months.

Like many parents, Reynolds and Lively are spending a lot of quality family time together these days.

“We’re doing a lot of homeschooling,” Reynolds told Stephen Colbert in April via video chat.

In addition to hunkering down with the Gossip Girl alum and their three daughters, the pair have also been joined by Lively’s mother, whom he called a “lifesaver.”

“It’s been incredible to have her here,” he added, before joking, “She doesn’t know it but actually, she’s emergency food if this gets real.”
