

Things to help those left behind.

1. Inventory List: Does not need to be super detailed but type of item and manufacturer are a plus. Value is always subjective.
2. Who gets all of my treasures?

3. A will is the most important thing to have overall. Secondary heir.
4. Who do I want to help my heir handle my collection?

5. Who do I NOT want to help with my stuff?

6. Now the person you chose to help should be able to offer your heir as much comfort and trust as they need. Things Like a contract, references from at least 2 or 3 others, inventory sheets of anything they may be removing from their possession (and not a sheet that says one box full of engines.) A solid payment time frame for items sold and that person should be able to show documentation of anything that was sold if asked. This is a great thing to set up way in advance.
7. Donation: This is a great option for some people, BUT beware of those who come around and the first thing out of their mouth is about donating to their club. We all have some valuable items that if sold would benefit our heirs. If items are to be donated an itemized list should be an absolute requirement, signed by at least 2 members of the board of the club.
8. Selling it all in one lump sum is about impossible, unless you only have 25 to 50 items. You will only get about 20 cents on the dollar most times regardless.
9. This document is for those you love. Fill it out and give it to them, you would be amazed at the relief it will bring to them.
