Parental Consent for Psych Testing and Treatment

Since 2019, parents have been having to play whack-a-mole with surveys, screeners, assessments, “check-ins” and any other way you can collect emotional data on children.

“It’s just a screening, not a test,” they said. “This is just a well-being survey,” they said. No, it’s a psychological test designed to gather information on children, and then usher a certain percentage of them into treatment, whether this is therapy or psychotropic drugs.

SB595 addresses this by using definitions based in Federal rule that cover exactly the kinds of activities parents are complaining about.

Voting "YES" for SB595 is not about whether or not one agrees with mental health treatment; it’s about who gets to decide - THE PARENTS!
