

Our parallel lives

converge in the venture of this first step.

Remote mountain giants

turn apart, paler than this emergent road;

the distant sangreal compelling us more certain than any harsh red dust under our feet.

Dead centuries of departing monotonously summon our believing.

Witness an hour's sunrise, the urgent Moon, unadorned Venus fortelling the ecliptic of our burning march through Georgia