

Delusion

My love language is grown and growing trees.
Sugar maples, in particular.
They become reaching hands. The begging leaves wanting my touch. When the slight winds stir aroused they're whispering my name. And me being human I look for what's ahead and it's a plantation where every tree is not the red of bleeding but of bled.