“The Lord will not be outdone in generosity.”

FROM FR. JOE

My dear friends, I am really excited about our new website. People have already begun using it to enquire about Sacraments and participation in the parish. It’s going to be a great, new tool for evangelization. I will keep you posted as new content is added. There should be new content uploaded to the site just about every week (if not every day)! So, keep coming back to see what’s new. Be patient, please, as it is a work in progress, but one that is already bearing fruit.

www.stmichaelbasilica.com

The most recent content added was last week’s addition of the Catholic Sharing Appeal information. As I mentioned, the past few years of figures are now reported there, as well as the way in which we have utilized those funds to improve the Basilica. The big projects on the horizon are the restoration of the pews, which are in serious need of care, the restoration of the bell and cradle, and the installation of a new security system for the Basilica campus. If you have not yet made your pledge to the appeal, please visit our website for more information. You’ll find the links to the campaign at the top of the page at “Giving & CSA”. We are at about two thirds of where we need to be by the end of the year to meet our goal. Please be generous!

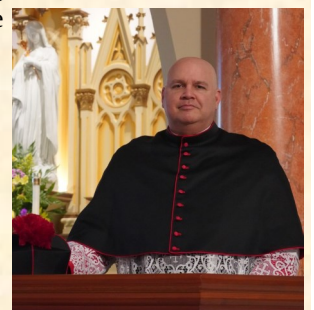

The readings this week allude to the ups and downs of pastoral ministry. The prophet Amos reminds those who are frustrated with him that he did not choose the life of a prophet for himself. He was called to it. Practically dragged off to it, as he describes it, by the call he received from God. He wants those who are angry with him to realize that He is only the messenger. Bishop John Ricard, one of our emeritus bishops, was fond of stating that as priests in ministry, we are in “sales, not management”. It is the Lord who gives the Word, we simply do our best to pass it on faithfully.

In the Gospel, we see the Apostles sent out two-by-two to minister to God’s people. Even they, as the super disciples, were not entrusted to the ministry alone, but with a companion and support. Carrying out the work of the Lord as prophets, disciples, Apostles, priests, bishops, popes, and laity is no easy task. Faithfully proclaiming the Word is not an effort without cost. Often God’s Word falls on ears that do not want to hear what God has to say.

How do we receive the Word? When God speaks to us, do we recognize His voice? How do we react when He challenges us to change and transformation? How do we react when He urges us to turn away from the sin in our lives? Before the individuals that God called in the Scriptures could be entrusted with the ministries they were given, they had to conform their lives to Christ through an ongoing conversion of heart. Are we ready for that? I hope your answer is yes!

God bless you all.
