According to the ruling, on Oct. 23, 2017, Neufeld posted on Facebook describing SOGI, as a "'weapon of propaganda,' which instructs children about the 'absurd theory' that 'gender is not biologically determined, but a social construct.'" He said "'allowing' children to 'change gender' was child abuse.'" The ruling states that Neufeld "ended the post saying he belonged in a country like Russia or Paraguay, 'which recently had the guts to stand up to these radical cultural nihilists,'" and linked to an article titled "Parents Defeat Gender Ideology in Paraguay." Neufeld later apologized for his post. However, the decision states that, "Over the next five years, Mr. Neufeld made dozens of public statements expressing his opposition to SOGI 1 2 3 and gender affirming care for trans youth, characterizing the reality of transgender and gender diverse people as simply a 'theory' or 'ideology,' and warning that teaching children about SOGI undermines social order and primes them for abuse."s
