Any testimonials are from actual clients & subscriber's feedback, emails, letters and other comments. They are not paid to provide testimonials. Due to privacy concerns full names are not provided to protect their privacy. Some testimonials may be shortened, but in no way modified other than for brevity. Any claims made by clients & subscribers have not been investigated, audited, or verified for accuracy. 19. GOVERNANCE

A) SmithWeekly is a research company that offers our research in the form of subscription letters and reports. Most of our products are free while some are paid. We do not provide individualized financial advice, legal advice, tax advice, life advice or any other type of personal advice that is regulated in various jurisdictions. Please consult your own licensed professional.

B) SmithWeekly does not allow, accept, nor receive any type of compensation, bribe, non-public information, or any other form of unethical and/or illegal means from companies, assets, products, or services that we may recommend. Our research and analysis is fully independent and derived from publicly available information. We may, at times, accept 3rd party advertising agreements from other businesses. If we do business with these advertisers, we will never recommend them in our research.

C) SmithWeekly reserves the right to act on their own recommendations that are published under our own research anytime before or after our research is released. We believe our interests should be aligned with our readers and supporters of our research. We eat our own cooking and we put our own efforts where our mouth is. Because we do not receive compensation in any form from ideas that we research, our readers are our only source of value. Their success is our success. If you don't agree with our "skin in the game" style of commitment to our readers and ourselves...don't read our work...we don't want you here.

D) SmithWeekly encourages our subscribers to submit complaints against SmithWeekly, its writers, analysts, stakeholders, agents, suppliers, or subcontractors for any matters of dissatisfaction, notable errors, or wrongdoings of any kind so that investigation and any disciplinary/corrective action can be taken in order to satisfy the matter. Please note that SmithWeekly will only consider complaints when the problem originated from SmithWeekly. We are not responsible for 3rd party information or acts of wrongdoing by 3rd parties. Complaints without sufficient credibility and/or information will not be considered.

E) SmithWeekly reminds users of our website, non-subscribed (free content) public readers, subscribers and clients of our important Terms of Use, Privacy Policy, Client Satisfaction & Guarantee, and Disclaimer. Governance & Disclosure Policies may change from time to time, without notice and at the discretion of SmithWeekly.
