GAOS July Meeting

By Pam Everett

GAOS held its monthly meeting and annual summer picnic Monday, July 11. The meeting was called to order by Jane Bush who announced that GAOS had won a $500 scholarship from the Mid-America Orchid Conference to underwrite costs for members who wish to attend the meeting scheduled for the last weekend of August in Kettering, Ohio. Jane asked interested members to contact her immediately in order for her to allocate the scholarship funds equitably.

Following the business meeting members who brought many orchids to a great show table shared their stories about the plants. Afterwards, members enjoyed the variety of meat, salads, vegetables and desserts everyone prepared.

In all, more than 20 people attended.

Powhatan Grower Delivers 'Biden' Orchid to First Lady

Powhatan County orchid grower Art Chadwick wheeled his company van onto the White House grounds last week, slowly made his way through layers of security and finally made it into the East Wing where he made his special delivery to first lady Jill Biden: two blooms from an orchid hybrid he developed, grew and named in her honor.

“Wow, this is amazing,” Chadwick recalled Biden saying when she saw the blooms.

Through his orchids, Chadwick, of Chadwick & Sons Orchids, has developed quite a connection to first ladies over the years. He said he had a “fantastic” visit at the White House on Tuesday, chatting with Biden for about 20 minutes in the Vermeil Room, on the ground floor of the residence. She had just concluded a meeting with the Ukrainian first lady.

“A two-hour power meeting, talking about all of the things going on over there, and here I’ve got my little flowers,” Chadwick said. “It seemed ridiculous ... the extremes there.”

But Biden seemed to enjoy their conversation, he said.

“Her favorite subject is flowers,” he said. “She goes out in her garden every day and cuts flowers, and she grades papers in the garden in this little gazebo. That’s her true passion: flowers.”

Chadwick said Biden, who is also a professor at Northern Virginia Community College, told him she would put one of the blooms on her desk and “maybe I’ll put one on Joe’s desk.”

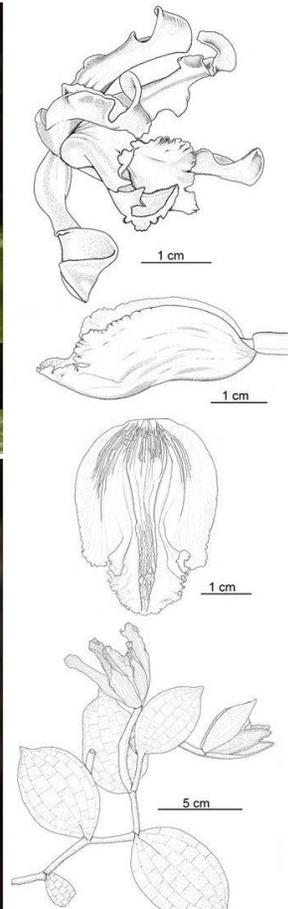

The Biden orchid blooms in July, producing large, greenish-yellow flowers, though some have distinctly magenta lips. The botanical name of the orchid is Brassolaeliocattleya Jill Biden (Goldenzelle x Sea Swirl). Chadwick officially registered the Biden hybrid with the Royal Horticultural Society.

New Orchids to Science

Vanilla andina new species belonging to subgen. Vanilla, is described and illustrated based on living material from Peru and Ecuador. The new species is similar to V. armoriquensis but can be easily distinguished by the prominent parallel callus, longitudinal narrow keels that extend above the middle of the lip and broadly obtuse to emarginate midlobe with crispate margins. – Novataxa 2022

Phalaenopsis Joy Fairy Tale

I finally could do a proper clear comparison between the 2-Eyes and 3-Lips clones.

The 2-Eyes tends to be more symmetrical than the 3-Lips, from what I've observed so far (both on my plants and on various pictures on the Web) but the 3-Lips is more colorful.

Both are gorgeous and have a wonderful sharp lemony fragrance (a single flower won't fill up an entire room with its fragrance, but it's definitely noticeable, it's not a mild fragrance)

This is a sequential bloomer with a beautiful growth habit that makes mature plants look almost like Vandas (they retain most of their older leaves and can look quite bushy after a few years!).

I grow these in a mix of 1/3 sphagnum moss, 1/3 bark and 1/3 horticultural charcoal, under grow lights (medium light).

I water with filtered water when the potting mix approaches dryness while still retaining a bit of moisture and I fertilize at least twice per month.

This cross give you an idea of the color and pattern variations you can get from some of the complex cattleya breeding. This is a definite benefit to seedling crosses if you're looking for something new and unusual. Check out the variety of colors.
