Quinn Davis Returns to ARCA Menards Series for Atlas 150 at Iowa Speedway
Opportunities Available for Partners to Join the Rising NASCAR Talent

Sparta, TN – July 9, 2025 — Following two remarkable ARCA Menards Series performances, 16-year-old Quinn Davis is set to return to the national stage on Friday, August 1st, competing in the Atlas 150 at Iowa Speedway. Driving the Petty Blue #31 Toyota Racing Camry for Rise Motorsports, Davis continues to turn heads and open doors as one of NASCAR's most compelling new prospects.

Davis, who finished 9th at Nashville Fairgrounds Speedway and 11th at Elko Speedway, has earned attention not only for her speed, but for her ability to outperform expectations against heavily funded teams. Her Elko run was especially noteworthy: despite being unable to qualify due to a last-minute electrical issue and starting 22nd, Davis clawed her way forward, on worn tires, to finish just outside the Top 10.

Unlike most teams, Davis entered Elko with only four new race tires, compared to the full 14 allowed. Thanks to partial sponsorship, the #31 team made every lap count and proved that grit still wins in this sport. While most competitors use iRacing for track prep, Elko isn't even available on the platform, leaving Davis to study archived videos and rely on instinct. And in true underdog fashion, her 14-hour RV road trip was made even harder with a broken A/C. As always, she rose to the challenge.

Now, with momentum building, Davis takes on Iowa Speedway, her first race at the Newton, IA oval, but far from her first foray into Midwest competition. Her development path included races in Kansas and Oklahoma, and this next step continues her push toward long-term success in the ARCA Menards Series and beyond.

“Iowa is another big step forward,” said Davis. “Every race is a chance to learn, grow, and show what we’re capable of, especially when the odds aren’t in our favor. I’m excited to get behind the wheel again.”
