Class Description:

74% of the population has a fear of speaking publicly. Pair fear and the current “device” lifestyle that has us digitally connected to a screen more than any other generation before us and all of a sudden the ability to further avoid public speaking becomes a lot easier. However, public speaking does not just mean presentations or work meetings. Public speaking is used when we order food, share our ideas, make new friends, and more. This practical exercise / game heavy class is aimed towards students understanding what makes them uncomfortable as well as how to be uncomfortable and still power through in the practical scenarios we use public speaking as well as career based public speaking. Speaking will be done every week with additional stage practices as well.
