Protecting Children by Strengthening Families

Our Mission: Safety, Permanency and Well-being for Every Child

Through collaboration with families and their communities, we advocate for the safety, permanency and well-being of each child we serve in a manner that honors family and culture.

Bettering Lives, One Child and Family at a Time

When I have the opportunity to introduce our agency's annual report, it can be challenging deciding what to highlight. That's because our employees, in partnership with the community, do so many outstanding things. This agency continues to be an innovator in ensuring the safety, permanency and well-being of Franklin County's children.

While we have much to be proud of, there are still challenges ahead. This past year, we enlisted input from our community partners, those we serve and the Annie E. Casey Foundation, to help define our strategic vision. This led to a focus in two key areas. First, we want to improve outcomes for adolescents, which begins by placing them in the least restrictive environment and a family-like setting whenever safely possible. We also want to cultivate a strong, sustainable workforce—staff that provides quality support and services to every child and every family.

Teens are coming into Children Services' care at a much higher rate than ever before—primarily because of behavioral issues, not because of abuse or neglect. Far too many of these youth are being placed in group (congregate) care. While FCCS believes that all children are best served within their families and communities, placement in non-family settings has become the most utilized option for teens. The data shows, however, that these youth in congregate care experience less stability and more negative outcomes than those in family-like settings. To address this, our goal is to work with the courts, our community providers and other partners to develop better options and resources to bring about greater outcomes for our teens.

Chip Spinning with 2015 Community Advocate Award Winners Eli and Gabe Rahm. The brothers have donated hundreds of backpacks, which they collected during birthday parties over the past five years, to children served by Children Services.

Empowering FCCS staff to do their best work for our youth and families is imperative. We are doing that in many ways including increasing staff mobility via technology, improving retention and worker support programs, and enhancing our orientation and training offerings.

I often say that Children Services cannot do this work alone. You will see examples throughout this report of how our staff, volunteers, families and community partners are focused on Bettering Lives, One Child and Family at a Time.

Thank you,

FCCS Caseworkers: Dedicated Child and Family Advocates

Child welfare caseworkers carry out Franklin County Children Services' mission of ensuring the safety and well being of children while building strong families. Here are three outstanding caseworkers—out of more than 300 here at FCCS—who are making a huge difference in the lives of kids and families every single day.

Craig Patronsky

Kelly Crawford

Allison Addison

West Region caseworker Craig Patronsky, who has almost 20 years of child welfare experience, excels at helping youth overcome difficult circumstances to realize their potential. “Kids who are troubled often carry baggage from experiencing traumatic situations that are beyond their control,” he says. “They need help in coping before they can succeed.” With patience and persistence, Patronsky has witnessed many positive changes in the lives of his kids, “seeing a young person move to the next stage in life with the skills that they need to succeed,” he says. “That can mean going to college or a trade school, getting a job and living independently, reconnecting with family or just resolving whatever conflicts are keeping them from living happily.”

Finding “forever” families for children is what adoptions caseworker Kelly Crawford does on a daily basis. Crawford, a 25-year FCCS veteran, believes that every child deserves a permanent, loving home, whether it’s for a sibling group of seven or a teenager about to age out of foster care. Crawford works tirelessly for children awaiting adoption, searching all over the United States for families who might make the perfect match.

The best part of Crawford’s job is seeing children flourish when they’ve finally found their ideal family. “I worked with a teenager who was nonverbal and on a lot of medication,” she recalls. “Since he’s been adopted, he’s off all of his medication, is playing sports and has just blossomed.”

Going above and beyond is the norm for intake caseworker Allison Addison, who has been with FCCS for almost five years. She routinely does everything she can to help the families on her caseload. Addison recalls working with a mother battling substance abuse who had left her children with neighbors and never came home. Addison was determined to help this woman, “because I knew that she was an awesome mother before her addiction took over her life,” she says. “We would drive around looking for her in the evening to try and get her into treatment.” Seeing her families overcome challenging circumstances keeps Addison motivated. “It’s rewarding to know that I am just a small part of the positive changes they are making in their lives,” she says.

FCCS Kinship Program: Family Caring for Family

Newlyweds Hildred and Billy Burroughs were just starting their lives together when they got the call. It was 2012 and because of abuse concerns and severe drug abuse issues, two of their youngest relatives were in immediate need of a safe place to stay. The Burroughs worked closely with Franklin County Children Services and soon, Hildred's step granddaughter's children April and Karson came into their home. A year later, they were joined by sibling Aurora. Today, all three children—now ages 2, 3 and 4—are safe, happy and lovingly looked after by the Burroughs, better known as Nana and Papa.

Franklin County Children Services relies on kinship families like the Burroughs—aunts, uncles, grandparents or even close family friends—to build a framework of support around children who, for one reason or another, cannot safely live with their parents. Sometimes, it's a temporary placement in a time of crisis while other times it's a permanent arrangement.

Kinship care is often the next best option when kids can't safely remain with their parents, preserving a vital sense of family and identity while maintaining an invaluable connection to culture and tradition. In 2015, Franklin County Children Services placed 1,679 children in kinship care, offering a range of support services to help these families and children more readily adapt to their changing circumstances.

The Burroughs, who now have legal custody of April, Karson, and Aurora, are committed to giving these siblings encouragement, support and stability—the kind of life every child deserves. While the Burroughs didn't intend to be chasing after three energetic little kids at this point in their lives, they certainly wouldn't change a thing. “Four years ago, we had just gotten married and had a different idea of how we would be spending our time,” Hildred says. “But these kids needed us and that's what you do for family.”

Billy agrees. “We love them,” he says. “These are our kids.” For more information on how Franklin County Children Services supports kinship families like the Burroughs, visit childrenservices.franklincountyohio.gov

FCCS Mentors: Being There When It Matters Most

For children involved in the child welfare system, consistent love, guidance and encouragement truly makes all the difference. Franklin County Children Services mentor Tom Craig knows this because he has been there himself. Adopted through FCCS when he was just 11 months old, Craig personally understands how important it is to be there for children in need. Becoming a mentor through the agency's Friendship volunteer program made perfect sense to him. "My experience was very positive, so I've always wanted to make a difference for kids who weren't as lucky as I was," Craig says.

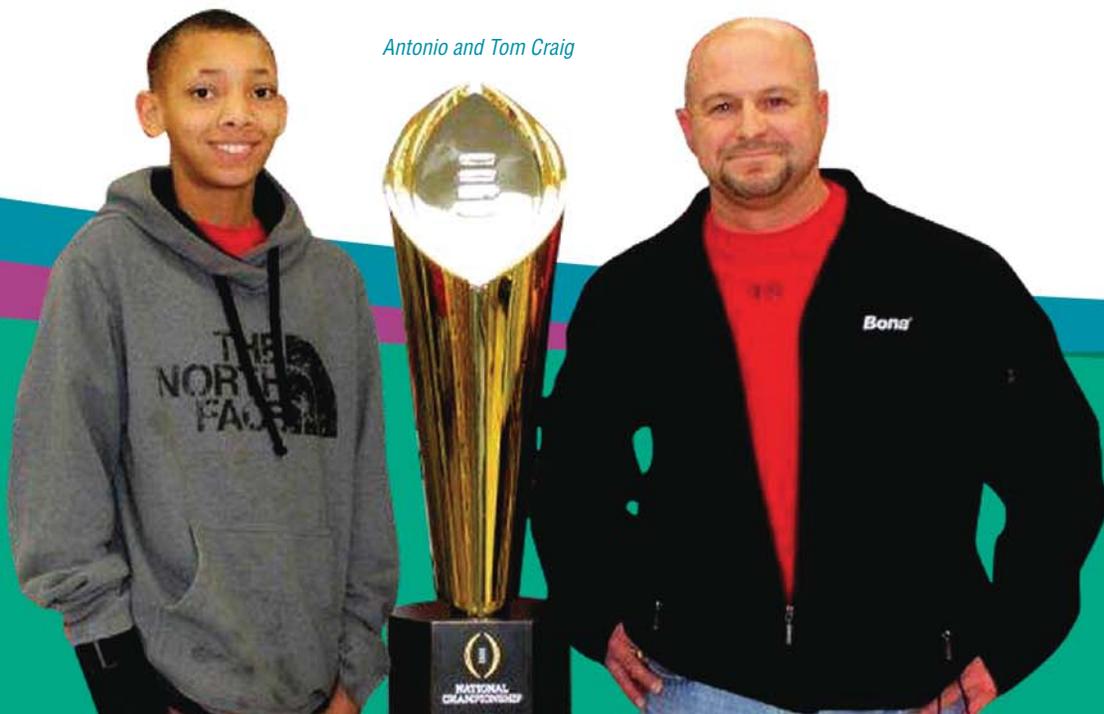

Craig, who manages a small business, has mentored 14-year-old Antonio for the past four years. The duo met while at Starfish Alliance's Royal Family Kids Camp, where Craig has served as both a counselor and dean of men over the past eight years. He got to know Antonio and decided to build on their relationship by committing to being the youth's mentor. "The individual attention and quality time that mentors give kids in tough circumstances is probably what they lack most—a consistent, positive influence in their lives," he says.

Craig is proud to be Antonio's mentor. "He's growing into a fine young man and a great athlete," he says of Antonio, who is involved in track and basketball. They enjoy spending time together at local sporting events.

Craig encourages others to mentor, since the need is always there. "It's easy to get angry about the bad things we see in the world these days, but I think that at the heart of a lot of bad situations there has been childhood trauma," Craig says. "You can make a positive change in the lives of kids who've experienced trauma just by being there as an example. It's not hard."

Offering a range of volunteer programs, FCCS is always looking for dedicated mentors like Tom Craig who are ready to be there for a child in need. Find out more about the transformative power of mentoring by calling 614-275-2690 or visiting childrenservices.franklincountyohio.gov/

The Bost family

FCCS's Family-to-Family Program: The Power of Community-Based Support

Like so many of us navigating life's ups and downs, Keata and Richard Bost just needed a little extra guidance when times got difficult for them and their three children. Thanks to Franklin County Children Services' Family-to-Family program, the Bosts got the assistance they needed to help them stay resilient while weathering challenging circumstances. Parenting classes, money management groups, adult support groups and youth services are all resources that this Columbus family has readily taken advantage of through Family-to-Family.

Family-to-Family offers that extra support and encouragement that could mean the difference between stability or a crisis situation for a family in need. A grassroots community partnership established in 2000, the program helps hundreds of FCCS-referred families like the Bosts right in their own neighborhoods, giving them the tools to remain healthy and self-sufficient. Whether it's preparing a single mom of four for a job interview, teaching a young man how to better budget his money or ensuring that a little girl with chronic medical issues is getting to her doctor's appointments, Family-to-Family is ready to help.

Serving families in 13 zip codes throughout the greater Columbus area, Family-to-Family partners with St. Stephen's East, North and South locations as well as Central Community House on the near east side, and Gladden Community House on the city's near west side in Franklinton. Breaking down traditional barriers to success and stability, the program assists families in accessing supportive services right where they live.

Families are more likely to overcome personal challenges when they can utilize resources and draw on support from their own communities, according to Megan Stevens, Franklin County Children Service's director of community development. "For more than 15 years, the Family-to-Family program has clearly demonstrated that community-based partnerships work when it comes to achieving positive outcomes for children and their families," Stevens says.

Franklin County Children Services 2015 Report of Services

Franklin County Children Services provided help for 32,659 children and their families via direct services from the agency's professional staff and through purchased services from provider agencies.

Prevention

Children Services believes that its mission to protect children by strengthening families can best be carried out by offering a variety of support services to families at every stage of a case. Prevention services are designed to provide help to families and children to prevent case openings, to prevent out-of-home placement of children, to prevent further maltreatment of children, and to prevent the recidivism of children who have returned home following placement.

Services are aligned with the Children Services mission and with meeting federal goals in three areas: permanency, well-being and safety.

Permanency

Children Services is committed to assuring a safe, permanent home for each child who cannot remain with or return to family.

In 2015:

- 152 adoptions were legalized
- For older youth under Children Services' care, 405 emancipation cases were referred to services & resources focused on achieving independence and self-sufficiency
- 58 youth involved with the agency graduated from high school or received their GED

Well-being

Children Services provides special opportunities and services to children and youth to enhance their well-being.

- 503 children were mentored by more than 529 volunteers through the agency's Friendship, Malaika, Simba and College-Bound mentoring programs. Youth were also helped by 68 FCCS crisis center volunteers at the agency's intake & investigations office.
- 6,072 children received gifts through the Holiday Wish program provided by 1,429 individuals and 297 groups, with the assistance of more than 212 Holiday Wish volunteers
- 223 youth received services through the Therapeutic Arts Program, in partnership with Neighborhood House, the Ohio Arts Council and Blick Art Materials

Protecting Children by Strengthening Families

Safety

Children Services intake and investigations staff provides protective services by investigating referrals of children who are alleged to be abused, neglected or dependent. These services are provided 24 hours a day. FCCS also accepts referrals from the Franklin County Juvenile Court on youth who are unruly or delinquent.

When investigations indicate a need for ongoing services, a case is opened and sent to one of the agency's two regions or two managed care partner agencies. Children Services provides case management, protective and supportive services, as well as purchased services from community agencies within a case plan agreed to by the family and Children Services casework staff.

In 2015, there were:

- 31,729 intake referrals received
- 12,647 family investigations completed
- Ongoing services for 5,249 cases
- Protective services for 14,697 individual family members
- Family services for 3,326 children through managed care partnerships
- 12,216 children served as part of the agency's active ongoing caseload

Every effort is made by Children Services to keep children with their families whenever safely possible. When out-of-home placement is necessary, the agency's goal is to place children in the least restrictive environment, to provide opportunities for and to facilitate regular visitation, and to reunite families as soon as this can be safely accomplished.

In 2015, Franklin County Children Services had:

- 4,225 children in agency custody
- 3,170 children in paid care
- 2,277 children placed in purchased foster care
- 1,228 children placed in group or institutional care
- 1,679 children placed with relatives
