Are you a Foundational Learner?

Foundational learners experience complexities that add to their learning challenges. Foundational learning programs can include people with:

- various disabilities (mental illness, learning disabilities, developmental disabilities)
- cultural differences
- challenging life situations
- individual goals for taking classes
- varying levels of skills

Did you struggle in school?

People often struggle in school from an undiagnosed learning disability. The more we learn about how the human mind works the more we are able to understand and properly diagnose what causes challenges for some. Some of the most common learning disabilities include dyscalculia (difficulty understanding numbers), dyslexia (difficulty with reading and comprehension), ADHD (difficulty with attention and sitting still) and processing deficits (difficulty making sense of sensory information).

Having a learning disability is not a barrier to the type of education or career you desire. There are resources available to build a plan of action to achieve your goals.

We can help!

Our goal is to create a supportive and welcoming environment where every learner can succeed. We believe that with the right guidance and encouragement, anyone can reach their potential, no matter their starting point. We provide personalized support and we're committed to helping you overcome any obstacles to learning.
