

EPISODE #043

"THE OBELISK"

Under pressure from the Eternal, Malzor prepares to annihilate the Earth's population with deadly spores.

With the alien numbers dwindling, Malzor concludes that a new, bold, plan of action is needed. Entering a sealed room, he removes the sacred Morthren obelisk composed of two crystals, one that accurately records the past, another that guides the future. After gazing at them, he decides to release deadly Talesian spores into the atmosphere to destroy all life on the planet. Mana questions such drastic action, but follows orders.

When Ceeto observes how a small test of the spores kills earthlings instantly, he is reminded of his human friend Debi, and their dreams to end the war. Appalled by Malzor's strategy, Ceeto confronts him, grabs the obelisk, and flees to alert Debi.

The teenagers meet at an abandoned theater, where Ceeto reveals Malzor's plans. Harrison and Suzanne track Debi to the meeting place, and Ceeto, wanting them all to understand the once-peaceful Morthren race, uses the obelisk to review his peoples' history. But to Ceeto's horror, the obelisk reveals that Malzor killed Mana's father to become the Morthren leader, and that the war was motivated by his crazed thirst to avenge the death of his wife Tila, a casualty of the first Morthren invasion of Earth in 1953.

Shaken by the discovery of Malzor's deceit, Ceeto signals Mana, and pleads with her to meet him. Arriving at the warehouse, she is devastated to learn that Malzor assassinated her father. Realizing that the spore release must be stopped immediately, she returns to Morthren headquarters to confront Malzor, with Ceeto and the Blackwood team right behind. Frenzied by Ceeto's betrayal, Malzor shoots him. Debi, reacting with horror and shock at the death of her alien friend, turns her gun on Malzor, killing him. Stunned by the turn of events, both sides lower their weapons and Mana tells the stunned team that Ceeto was her son. It appears that the war, at long last, is over.
