Thirty-five years ago, Earth was invaded by what seemed at the time an invincible army of aliens. Were it not for the aliens' susceptibility to ordinary bacteria, the invasion would have been successful -- the common cold accomplished what atomic bombs had failed to do. The aliens were stopped -- but not defeated.

The aliens did not die. Their complex molecular structure merely retreated into a form of suspended animation, imprisoning them in a state of involuntary hibernation.

Revived by accidental exposure to radioactive waste, the aliens have resumed their deadly mission: to rid the Earth of all human life and prepare it for alien colonization.

PAGE TWO

Four intrepid people find themselves thrown together by this new alien threat: Dr. Harrison Blackwood, an eccentric astrophysicist recruited to lead the scientific assault against the aliens; Dr. Suzanne McCullough, a brilliant microbiologist and single mother whose serious demeanor contrasts with Blackwood's non-conformity; Norton Drake, a computer genius who operates from a voice-controlled wheelchair; and Lt. Col. Paul Ironhorse, a Cherokee Indian and West Point graduate with an extensive knowledge of weapons and tactics.

Together they face an unspeakable challenge: to defeat this ruthless enemy from space or forfeit the future of mankind.
