LICHTENSTEIN, HILLEL:

By : Isidore Singer Gotthard Deutsch

Hungarian rabbi; born at Vecs 1815; died at Kolomea, Galicia, May 18, 1891. After studying at the yeshibah of Moses Sofer he married, in 1837, the daughter of a well-to-do resident of Galantha, where he remained until 1850, when he was elected rabbi of Margarethen (Szent Margit). In 1854 he was elected rabbi of Klausenburg, but the opposition of the district rabbi, Abraham Friedmann, made it impossible for him to enter upon the duties of the office; finally he was expelled from Klausenburg by the authorities. Having lived for some time at Grosswardein, he was recalled to Margarethen, where he remained until about 1865, when he was called to Szikszo. Thence he went, in 1867, to Kolomea, where he remained until his death. Lichtenstein was the outspoken leader of the Orthodox extremists in Hungary: he not only resisted the slightest deviation from the traditional ritual, as the removal of the Almemar from the center of the synagogue, but even vigorously denounced the adoption of modern social manners and the acquisition of secular education. He bitterly opposed the Hungarian Jewish congress of 1868-69 and the establishment of the rabbinical seminary in Budapest. In 1865 he called a rabbinical convention at Nagy-Mihaly, which protested against the founding of a seminary and sent a committee to the emperor to induce the government to prohibit its establishment. In his religious practise he surpassed the rigorism of the most Orthodox Hungarian rabbis, even going so far as to keep a she ass in order to be able to fulfil the law of the redemption of the first-born of the ass (see Ex. xiii. 13). He kept a sheep also in order to be able to give the first fleece to a kohen (Deut. xviii. 4), from whom subsequently he bought it back to make á°“iá°“it from it. Lichtenstein was an ardent admirer of the á¸¤asidim and made pilgrimages to the famous miracle-worker á¸¤ayyim Halberstam of Sandec. He offered his ownintercession through prayer to people in distress, but declined any gifts.

Lichtenstein was a powerful preacher and a popular writer, and the resistance to modern tendencies among the Jews of northern Hungary is largely due to his influence. He inveighed against the use of other than traditional Jewish names; he denounced not only secular education, but even the playing of musical instruments and innocent social games, like chess and checkers; and he condemned those who relied on reason, for the ideal Jew should live up to the principle of Psalm lxxiii. 22, "I was as a beast before thee" ("'Et la-'Asot," p. 118a, Lemberg, 1881). He was a decided opponent also of all agitation for the political emancipation of the Jews, saying that it is the duty of the Jews to suffer the tribulations of the Exile until God finds them ripe for Messianic redemption.

Of the numerous works which Lichtenstein wrote, some of them being in Hebrew and others in JudÃ¦o-German, the most important are "Maskil el Dal" (Lemberg, 1867), "'Et la-'Asot" (ib. 1881), and "Abá¸³at Rokel" (ib. 1883), all of which have been repeatedly reedited. They are all devoted to the denunciation of liberal Judaism. In Hebrew Hillel signs his name (Lash), which is an abbreviation for (Lichtenstein).

THE OTTENSTEIN FAMILY HISTORY
By Adelle (Ottenstein) Weinstock
March 1996

My father, Tzvi Hirsch Ottenstein, anglicized to Harris was born in a small town (1874) Supresla - 2 hours by horse and wagon from Bialystok, Poland; then under Russian rule. He was the 5th child of six of Tsiril Zuts and Yacov Ottenstein. In chronological order they were Mordechai, Shayul (Sam), Ysroel (Israel), Enyah (Annie) Herschel and Undiss (Eudice).

~~When Herschel was 9, his father died. Mordechai and his mother undertook the running of their~~ small general store. They were never rich but after their father died, life became more difficult. Israel, who was never good at books was apprenticed to a tailor. He was the first to leave for The Golden Land. Shayul was drafted into the Csar's army. Mordechai, who found working to support the younger children difficult, encouraged Herschel to emigrate to America. Herschel had been a very good student and his mother, like all Jewish mothers hoped he would become a Rabbi. His Rebbe also had great dreams for him but at the great age of 14 Herschel set out to join his brother (1888).

Herschel left Suprelsa promising his Rebbe to be a good observant Jew but the life he was thrown into was not conducive to such observance. Israel took him to "The Shop" where the workers ridiculed the Greener who was fasting on Tisha B' Av. Herschel had come to America during a period of great turmoil - the age of enlightenment. Socialism - Unionism - free thinking were in the air. It did not take young Herschel - Harris now - long to be carried along with the tide.

His first lodgings were on the East Side in the home of some landsleit -folks who had also come from Supresla. He slept on a cot in the kitchen where cooking was done on a coal stove - even in the stifling heat of the summer (He reached U.S.A. in July). He often resorted to sleeping on the fire escape or on the roof.

Harris did find learning to operate a sewing machine easy. Machines were worked manually and with a foot pedal. However he was persistent and he became a good operator. The busy season was short and the slack season long and so a 14-hour day was not unusual. When necessary, workers would go from shop to shop with the machines strapped to their back seeking employment.

Harris, ever the student, was determined to learn the language and he attended night-school whenever possible. He kept an English-Yiddish dictionary in his pocket and consulted it frequently. He soon mastered reading and writing but he had little opportunity to speak English with the green-horns who spoke Yiddish to one another. In the cloak and suit trade, Yiddish was all you needed.

When Harris had been in the country about two years, a new borderke came to live with the landsleit. She was Layke (Leah) Gurwitz, fresh from the out-skirts of Bialystok. Harris watched Layke - now Lena Horowitz and observed her closely and he thought she would make a good wife for his brother Shayul - home from the army and planning to emigrate.

Lena was 17 or 18 (I have never been able to reconcile the ages and dates given me but the discrepancy is not of more than a year or two). She was the last child (10th) of Moishe and Zlotte Gurwicz, a very poor elderly couple. Of their 10 children, 5 died in infancy.

Layke had a boyfriend who was going to America and so she was persuaded to go. The only relative she had in America was a sister-in-law who subsequently _____ Layke's brother Yankel.

The trip across the Atlantic - in steerage of course - took 3 weeks. Layke was sea-sick and home-sick and cried most of the time. On the other hand, the boyfriend was liberated. He divested himself of all Yiddeshkeit - ate the food that was served and thoroughly enjoyed the thought that he was going to the U.S.A.. He found his tear-stained girlfriend a drag and the relationship that was to have blossomed into marriage never developed.

Layke - Lena found lodging in the same flat where Harris was a boarder. As already noted, he found her very attractive. He watched her help their landlady with the household chores and he thought she would make someone a great wife - his brother Shayul perhaps. He, himself was too _____ to think of marriage. His brother Shayul eventually married a friend of Lena -whom I remember as Tante Ida from the Bronx (I had another Tante Ida from upstairs - Israel's wife).

All the Greener quickly acquired English names and most of them divested themselves of religious restrictions. To a large degree, this was out of necessity. Poverty compelled them to work on the Sabbath and one thing led to another. Lena tried her best to maintain religious observance.

Lena eventually overcame her home-sickness and made friends with the other landsleit. There was a strong bond of commanderie among the young immigrants. They helped one another as much as possible and made the most of every simcha. No flat was too small to squeeze in another friend. A wedding or a Bris (which followed quickly) was an occasion to which everyone was invited. This was the case when Lena and Harris were married on December 8, 1895 in Victoria Hall 80-82 Clinton Street, New York.

In the years between 1890 and 1895 the friendship between Lena and Harris had blossomed into a romance - so much so that when Lena's boyfriend from the old country wanted to resume their relationship, Lena rejected him. It was during these 5 years that Harris' mother and two sisters left Supresla and joined their brothers Israel, Sam and Harris. Several years later, Mordechai came with his wife and 4 children.

But back to Lena and Harris! Everyone they knew was invited to the wedding as was the custom. In those days, young couples homes were _____furnished by gifts - not money but actual pieces of furniture. The women did not go to work and they took great pride in their house-keeping skills: cleaning, cooking, sewing, baking. The degrading type of East Side life described by Philip Roth was not the kind of life my parents and their relatives lived. The flats were bitterly cold in the winter - toilets were in the hall - true - but the women washed and scrubbed tirelessly. They sewed too. Almost every woman made her children's clothing. The men worked hard but the women worked hard too.

Since Lena was married, she was able to follow all the religious rules incumbent on a good Jewish wife. Harris respected her religious faithfulness but did not change his modern ways. I once asked my mother how she had come to marry a man who was not religious. She replied that among the young men she knew there were none who remained observant - that Harris had had more learning than the others and she hoped that she could influence him to change. It was not until many years later that he became a Bal T'shuvanik but he took it all with a grain of salt. He often said that he was sorry he had not helped Lena maintain a truly orthodox home - but he had never hindered her - in fact he admired her for her steadfastness.

In spite of their differences, they established a good, peaceful Jewish home and we children knew our parents loved one another.

Although Harris and Lena were very poor, they were never penniless. He was a tireless worker and she was an excellent housekeeper. He earned $8 a week and there were many weeks that he didn't work because of the slack season - but they believed a penny saved was a penny earned. The tree brothers - Harris, Israel and Sam helped each other when necessary. Eventually they became owners of their own businesses. Harris and Israel formed a partnership H and I Ottenstein - contractors and eventually manufacturers of coats and suits for stouts. (Sam went into the button business). Israel, the tailor , studied design and was the "Inside Man", i.e. he supervised the production; Harris was the "Outside Man, i.e. the buyer and salesman. They built a good substantial business which supported two families and later the families of their sons. The business lated until 1959 when problems with the demands of the union drove them out of town and eventually out of business. This is ironic because Harris, in the 1890's was a red-hot union man and involved in the building of that union.

In 1907, Harris and Israel, eager to take their children away from the crowded streets of the East Side bought a two-family house in Boro Park, Brooklyn - 1327 45th Street which remained in the family until 1979. In 1908 I was born in that house - the fourth and last child of Harris and Lena. My brother Morris was then 10; my sister Charlotte was 8, and Nathan was 4.

Harris and Israel had an unusual relationship - one of true brotherhood, and I recall seeing the two of them walking side-by-side down the street on their way home from work. I do not recall their ever quarreling - or hearing about any quarrel between them. It was a truly loving relationship. When Israel died in 1950 - 13 years before my father, my father said "Israel was a good boy".
