About the Composer

Sahasra Chakkirala (b.2005) (She/Her/Hers) is a composer, classical guitarist, pipe organist, and educator based in Tucson, Arizona. Known for blending innovation with emotional depth, her music transports listeners into rich, multi-layered sonic worlds. With a distinctive voice that combines narrative-driven storytelling, minimalist textures, and inventive instrumental techniques, Sahasra invites audiences to experience music as a journey.

She is currently pursuing studies in Composition and Classical Guitar under the mentorship of Dr. Pamela Decker, Dr. Kay He, and Professor Tom Patterson at the University of Arizona. Throughout her academic career, she has showcased her versatility through solo and ensemble performances, as well as conducting choral ensembles across a range of skill levels. She has arranged and directed repertoire for middle school choirs, serving as a guest conductor and fostering musical growth in emerging musicians.

On classical guitar, Sahasra has performed extensively and participated in masterclasses with the renowned David Russell. She has premiered works by leading contemporary composers, including Olga Amelkina-Vera, and has been an active member of the Tucson Guitar Society Orchestra. As a composer, her original works for guitar orchestra have been performed nationally and internationally, including by the Glendale College Guitar Orchestra and the Essex Classical Guitar Society Orchestra in the United Kingdom. Her acclaimed trilogy Stars—featuring Tracing Orion, Constellations, and The Sky Remembers—exemplifies her immersive, story-driven approach to music.

A passionate educator, Sahasra operates a private studio teaching guitar across a wide range of styles and to students of all ages. She provides private composition lessons for K-12 students, emphasizing both the history and craft of music, and offers specialized instruction in counterpoint, focusing on 16th-century techniques. As a mentor and tutor, she cultivates creativity, technical skill, and artistic expression in her students.

Looking forward, Sahasra continues to expand her compositional horizons through collaborations with visual artists and multimedia projects while writing for guitar orchestras and solo instruments worldwide, establishing herself as a dynamic and visionary voice in contemporary music.

Program Notes

Tracing Orion, the first work in the Trilogy of Stars, explores the quiet majesty and mythic resonance of the night sky through the collective sonority of a four-part guitar orchestra. The piece takes inspiration from the constellation's iconic shape—its belt, its extended arms, and its luminous presence—and translates those contours into interlocking melodic lines. Each section of the ensemble functions as a star point, contributing its own shimmer to the work's overarching musical constellation.

The piece opens with a sense of searching: gentle, suspended harmonics and sustained arpeggios evoke the slow emergence of Orion from the dusk. As the voices begin to overlap, the material traces the constellation's movement across the sky, with rhythmic pulses suggesting both celestial navigation and the steadiness of ancient stargazers. Gradually, the parts weave together in arcs of rising and falling intensity, mirroring the way Orion's figure becomes clearer as the eye adjusts to darkness.

By the final section, the guitars coalesce into a radiant, unified texture. What began as fragmented star-points gathers into a glowing sonic form, symbolizing connection across distance—between performers, between listeners, and between the earthly and the cosmic. Tracing Orion stands as a musical meditation on orientation and wonder, a reminder of how the stars have guided human imagination for millennia.
