

Blue dress

A photo story by Andrea Slip

Andrea shows how to spot whether a lady is wearing a full slip or a half-slip under a dress. Watch out for the green arrows which provide some helpful hints about what to look for.

I recently bought a new dress in a sale. Very pretty, made of a fairly thin blue viscous material, very cheap from Sainsbury Tu range. It has some lovely lace on the front going down in a vertical line. I imagine I might wear it to a drinks party.

Bit longer than I have bought before but that's not a problem. It will look lovely with some sheer hosiery, perhaps white for a change from black, and some heels of course.

The problem is it came with a navy blue built in slip, for modesty, as the material of the dress is quite thin. The built in slip is a horrible scratchy material, ultra plain. This dress cries out for a real slip. A silky nylon slip with lots of lace, which can actually be seen through the dress! If I did wear it to a party would there be some appreciative slip watchers there to enjoy a slip sighting and how would they know if I was wearing a full slip or a half-slip? Well let me show you with some helpful hints.

The first thing I did when I got home from buying the dress was to remove the built in slip. That was easy as it was only sewn in on the shoulder, two snips and it was detached. Threw it away, yuch! It was so horrible that I am not even going to show it to you.

There is no front opening on the dress but does have some little pleats. It is quite long so there would be no flash of a hidden delights either standing or sitting down. Or perhaps that just depends on how a lady might sit. It is quite a full skirt but if the skirt was draped loosely it might be possible, in certain circumstances, for an eagle eyed slip spotter to catch a glimpse up the lady's skirt to get a delightful peek of a lacy slip and maybe even a hint of stocking tops.

Perhaps the lady might accidentally catch the dress in her jewellery as she reached for her drink, lifting the front of the dress. The slip spotter, more commonly known as a pervert, would then get a delightful view of a lacy slip and more of those gorgeous nylon clad legs. It might even answer that age old question, tights or stockings?

Perhaps that question might also be answered if the lady has just been to the toilet and has inadvertently tucked her skirt into her knickers (it has happened). In so doing she accidentally reveals that she is indeed wearing delightful lacy white stockings and even white nylon panties. The “pervert” might be starting to get a stiffy by this point. Being a true gentlemen, of course, he might tell her that her skirt is caught, eventually. She looks down and is a little embarrassed but quickly pulls her dress out of her knickers and the delightful view is gone in the blink of an eye. The stiffy has not.

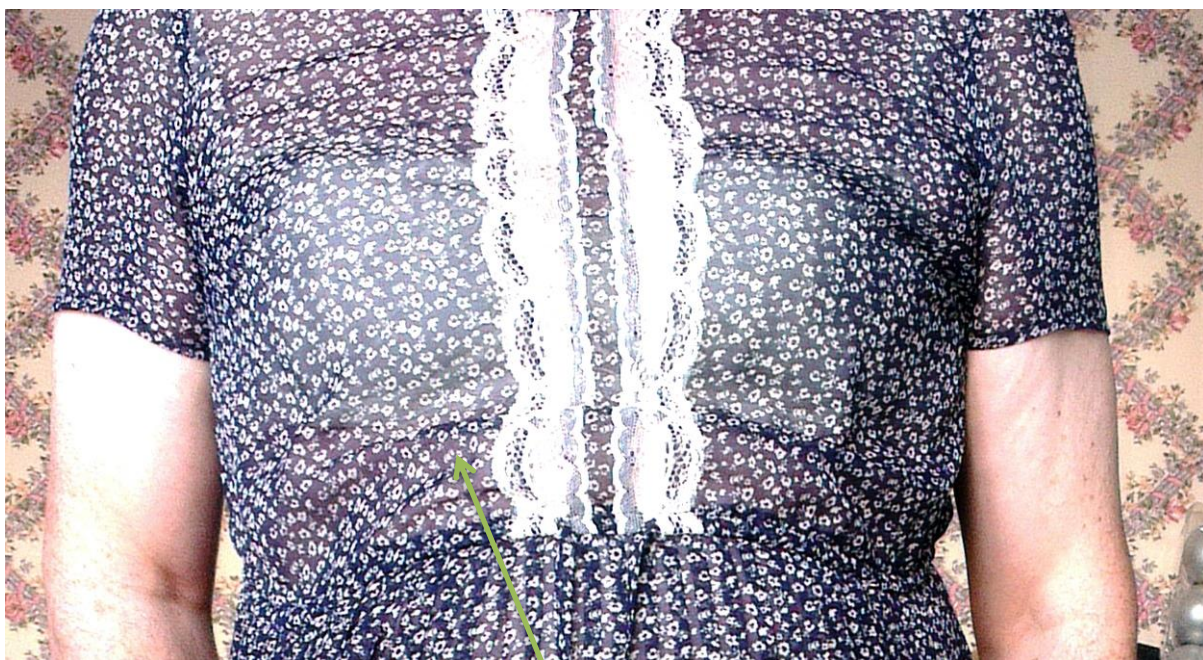

Or perhaps the lady might be in a quiet corner where she thinks no one is watching and she needs to adjust those stockings. Quickly she lifts the dress, then the silky white slip to reveal not only the lacy stocking stop but the fact that the stockings are actually held up by suspenders, they are clearly not hold ups as the lady fiddles with the clasp of the suspender belt where it attaches to the lacy stocking top and pulls the top of the stocking up in a little triangle shape. Then, suddenly, the dress and slip are down and the stockings are hidden from view, all over in a flash.

Some questions remains. Is she wearing a full slip or a half-slip?

This can be a little hard to determine from the front. You could look at her chest to find out if she is wearing just a bra. Seeing a lacy bra, but a gap underneath, through a thin dress is just lovely but if you are not absolutely sure staring at a lady's boobs for too long might give the wrong impression. You will probably get your face slapped and be called "A pervert," which of course you are. It might be possible at a quick glance to distinguish between just a bra on its own and a full slip but this could still be a bit tricky depending on the colour of the slip, the key is to look for two straps on each shoulder.

A more reliable guide is to look when the lady is facing away from you so that you get a clear view of her back. The bra on its own really stands out with the horizontal band and only one set of straps. Distinguishing between a bra and a full slip is much clearer, especially if the top of the slip also has a lacy band around the back, and you should be able to pick out the double straps on the shoulders. Of course you cannot be absolutely certain if this is a full slip as it just could be a camisole or possibly even a teddy/cami-knickers. Sights such as these are rare today but for the pervert a truly exciting experience, and one that can be lingered over without fear of reprisals.

The only effective way to establish if the lady is wearing either a full slip or a half-slip / camisole combo is to have a face to face conversation with her such as this:

"I say, my lady, I see that is a lovely slip you are wearing under your dress, so rare to see these days but just so feminine. I am curious, is that a full slip or a half slip and can isole?"

She will respond in one of three ways:

a) raise her dress and gives you a view of her delightful slip so that there is no absolutely no doubt that is a very pretty half-slip with a lovely lacy hem and slightly see through so that you can also establish that she is also wearing nylon panties and stockings with a suspender belt (oh joy!)

b) say it is actually her mother's old full slip and that they are coming back into fashion (but you can't tell if she is telling the truth or being ironic).

or c) slap you in the face and call you a pervert (again)!

If you got the first response a) you might be embolden and want to go further by saying:

“Well that is a delightful half-slip, but forgive me for asking but is that stockings and suspenders I can see through the slip?

She might say coyly,” Well spotted kind sir, would you like me to show you?”

You grunt and remember to nod your head as she lifts the delicate slip to reveal the matching shiny white nylon panties, suspender straps and lacy white stocking tops.”

Don't forget to say thank you before you rush to the toilet to clean up that damp patch on your trousers.

However, if the response to asking her if it was a half-slip or full slip was b) you may still want to find out what panties she is wearing. There is a sneaky way but it is a high risk strategy. You can fall on the floor shouting "Oh the prawns," and clutch your stomach. Your hope is that she might stand over you and let you see right up her skirt so that you can check out the stockings, slip and panties. The risk with this strategy is that you might get more than you bargained as some "ladies" have a surprising bulge in their panties. You will certainly find out if she is wearing, bikini panties, French knickers or the hideous thong. Let's hope it is one of the first two.

Perhaps in her concern for your well-being she might kneel by your side to see if you are OK. As you struggle to your feet you may again get an extremely interesting view of panties, lacy slip, suspender strap and lacy stocking tops. All of which is in silky white nylon.

However if her response about full slip or half was c) you are going to have a sore face and will probably have to leave the party in embarrassment. It is your choice to ask these questions knowing the risk and depending on how brave you are feeling. Just saying!

What if the lady chose to wear no slip at all? Well it would be quite exciting to see for the pervert as the panties, bra, suspenders and stocking tops would be quite clear under this dress, hence the obvious need to wear a slip.

Of course for the lady, wearing a nylon slip under a dress is a delightful experience in itself. Even with a full slip care must be taken to make sure it is the correct length. A short length full slip might not cover the stocking tops so perhaps a longer slip should be worn or a half-slip instead.

So what slips did I wear under the blue dress? First I wore a little half-slip with a lovely lacy hem (bought recently from BHS) and then a rather short full slip with a little split over my left thigh. Perhaps next time I might wear a longer navy blue full slip.

What about the panties, suspenders and bra? All are silky white or cream and yes they are lovely to wear with either of the two slips. It was a pleasure to show you what I wore under my new blue dress. Women, throw away built in slips and buy real nylon slips, they are so much nicer. The feel of a silky slip moving under a dress is wonderful and can be used as a real tease, either accidentally or deliberately when worn with stockings. Men, watch out for slips, or, like me, cross dress for yourself in pretty lingerie and dresses.

And finally, if you too are a pervert (sorry a slip watcher) I hope you enjoyed this story with a successful conclusion, for you that is, in the normal way. Let me know if you did.

The End
