

Message from Reverend Richard

I'm delighted to say that, now that the Covid situation is greatly improved, services will resume at the church from Sunday 14th March (Mothering Sunday). This will also be a communion service. However, we will be under the same restrictions as before, masks must be worn, social distancing strictly observed (including before and after the service), and please use the hand-sanitiser. Unfortunately, Methodist guidelines also say that we shouldn't have congregational singing. Even though many of the congregation will have had the first dose of a vaccine, we still need to be careful. Despite all these restrictions, I think all who came to services prior to this latest lockdown will agree that it is still great to be back worshipping together.

The services will be video recorded, and available on the website the day after the service, so those still unable to attend won't miss out.

Thank you to all who have kept the church going in so many different ways in these difficult times, and continue to do so.

God bless you.

Richard.
