

Medical Malpractice Cases

As a plaintiff attorney handling medical malpractice cases, you have invested significant effort in advocating for your client's well-being, constructing a robust case, and striving to achieve the best possible outcome to address their unique circumstances.

As you navigate the intricate landscape of settling medical malpractice claims, it is crucial to recognize the profound implications that extend far beyond mere settlement negotiations or securing a substantial verdict. The choices you make before and during the mediation process can reverberate with long-term consequences for your client, their family, and your own legal accountability as their dedicated attorney.

At AFG Settlement Planning, we understand the intricate nuances and distinct challenges inherent to medical malpractice cases. We ardently believe that individuals and families who receive substantial settlements due to medical negligence deserve nothing short of comprehensive planning and tailored solutions to safeguard their financial resources, mitigate tax liabilities, preserve vital government benefits, and secure their future stability.

Our founder, Brian Adair, holds a deeply personal connection to the realm of settlement planning, having witnessed the impact of medical malpractice when his father fell victim to such circumstances. His experience fueled his determination to address the lack of innovative options available to plaintiffs, ensuring their long-term well-being and financial security following the receipt of a significant settlement or verdict.

We are unwavering in our commitment to extending the same meticulous planning and attentive care to medical malpractice cases as we would to a business owner selling a multimillion-dollar enterprise. Leaning on our proprietary methodologies and extensive expertise, we provide unparalleled customized solutions that comprehensively address the intricate legal, tax, and investment aspects unique to medical malpractice claims.
