Barriers Encountered	I have still been calling families on their hospital room phone during the pandemic. This can be challenging due to some families not answering the phone and not being able to leave a message for them. It has been a bit more difficult to engage families over the phone than it is in person as the face to face personal connection just isn't there. Also, several families I have made contact with were non-English speaking families. For those non-English speaking families, I have used the interpretation system the hospitals have available.
Success Stories	Part of our coordinated intake program includes making follow up phone calls/emails to families who were interested in resources and/or provided contact information to our program. These phone calls are done about a month after initially speaking with the family to check on how the family is doing and if there are any resources they may be needing since going home from the hospital. While making several follow up calls, it came to my attention that several families were in need of addition items/resources. One mom said she had everything for baby but later shared she needed a pack n play for baby to have a safe place to sleep. Family and Children's Council was able to provide a pack n play for baby to sleep in. Another mom was not interested in resources in the community while at the hospital, but she did express interest a month later. I was able to complete a referral for her for home visiting.
