

Paper: A Re-Definition of the term “virus” May be Appropriate

Date: 05 May 2020 (rev. 14 Feb 2023)

By: D. R. Shearer

Topic: The term “virus” has been in question, as to not existing at all, according to (ex)Virologist, Dr. Stefan Lanka & others. Evidence from the late 1800’s happens to be the hinge point of how it is that “infectious contagion” ever came into human consciousness at all. It is this information, along with a re-definition or elimination of the term ‘virus’, given its heavily loaded attributes, is what this paper is about.

Exist or Not Exist

Truth is emerging now on the planet, which is an inevitable consequence of both the complexities and cost, of sustaining untruths, and keeping them alive. The process becomes overburdening and unmanageable, over time.... in this case a very long time. This is before us now.

Not that the rewards of perpetrating falsehoods are unprofitable... the exact opposite is true, as we know from big pharma. But it is the management of keeping the falsehood alive, in a society where elevating collective consciousness is the order of the day, that becomes over burdensome (costly).

Regarding “viruses”, collective reasoning & emerging information, now arrives at a higher realization which can finally put this issue to rest. That will be explained in the following.

Background information for this paper is contained within the many documents of our Truth Centre which will not be repeated for this discussion. An exception is being made, for this excerpt from a research paper on polio:

“The concept of the symbiotic virus is explained in Encyclopedia Britannica, Macropaedia (1990) p507: Although viruses were originally discovered and characterized because of the diseases they cause most viruses that infect bacteria, plants, and animals (including humans) do not cause disease. In fact, bacteriophages [bacteria viruses] may be helpful in that they rapidly transfer genetic information from one bacterium to another, and viruses of plants and animals may convey genetic information among similar species, aiding the survival of their hosts in hostile environments.”

Dr. Stefan Lanka, Virologist/Biologist

To begin, the term “virus”, which is Latin for “poison”, was introduced to mankind, by Louis Pasteur. This was a term coined, initially for military and political reasons. It was commissioned by the existing government, at the time, to create a reason to stop the British from retaining the passage through the Suez Canal and crossing the Mediterranean. The 'spreading' of a 'contagious pathogen' was needed to do this. This accomplishment allowed for the shooting of individuals when trying to dock at Gibraltar, for fear of passing on a "deadly disease".

The 'opposing' research being conducted, while Pasteur was busy with political issues, which turned out to be the first authentic research into cytology, is located in the French Academy of Sciences & Medicine. It was performed by Prof. Antoine Bechamp, Prof. Alfred Estor and their colleagues, and was intentionally suppressed at that time & since. The details are contained in other Papers.

Emerging evidence surfacing currently which represents the frail foundation that is the existence of pathogenic 'microbes', will keep coming and will not be stopped. This is definite characteristic of a false paradigm when it reaches the end of its life span.

Conclusion

Whatever the Encyclopedia Britannica, was referring to (probably exosomes), it was not the cause of disease. This would be consistent with the understanding of exosomes and also, with the research of Professors Antoine Bechamp & Alfred Estor, in their discovery of the micro-particle, microzymas. These particles are inherent to the body and 'morph' according to the ambient environment.

The alternative findings around the time of the invention of 'germ theory' left us with the understanding that the 'germs' that resided within our body were there for the benefit of our physiology. This, by way of the particle, microzymas operating within the effects of Pleomorphism, as it strives to maintain equilibrium, for our optimum health.

The notion of there being pathogenic exogenous "microbes", is something that just no longer exists, as we find out that the term itself ("microbe") was invented by Pasteur. It is the perpetuated stigma & fear that heavily characterized the words "virus" and "microbe", both in the late 1800's and up to the current day. Fear is a great motivator and a great tool for profit generation. This is why continuing to utilize a term or terms that have been so loaded cannot be continued when no such nefarious attributes can be attached to them without basis.

This is not to say that standard precautionary measures should be aborted. Good hygiene should always be maintained, including with the food industry guidelines. But clear definition of a situation is most important and past nefarious incorrectness is not helpful at anytime. This is evidenced with the knowledge that bacteria are largely beneficial and do not cause disease in an aerobic environment (i.e. within the living human body). This is evidenced when botulism swells the body of a tin can over time. It is the toxins produced by botulism, once operating in an anaerobic environment (a sealed can or in the middle of a potato salad in the summer sun), that produce the deadly poisons.

This is also corroborated by the fact that bacteria do not start producing these toxins until after 2 days in a dead body.

Once we understand the situation by removing the untruths, and going back to trusting the body, and the miraculous systems that are there to protect and guide us, at every turn, freedom will then result. This is as it was always meant to be.

“In order to teach the Rockefeller drug ideology, one must also teach that Mother Nature did not know what she was doing when she created the human body.”
Hans Reusch
